60-Odd Warships Reported Scuttled at Toulon; Allies Open Offensive to Corner Foe in Tunisia; Reds Drive Ahead Despite Stiffened Nazi Defense

150,000 British, American Troops Believed Ready for All-Out Assault On Strategic Tunis-Bizerte Area; Our Forces Destroy 51 Axis Planes

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—Lieut. Gen. Kenneth A. N. Anderson's powerful British First Army with American mobile units has launched a big offensive against the Axis forces in northern Tunisia, the Algiers radio declared tonight.

"The period of patrol activity finished, the First Army has left its defense positions for the big offensive," the broadcast said, apparently heralding an all-out assault on an estimated 20,000 Axis troops dug in on a formidable defense line outside the cities of Bizerte and Tunis.

The Swiss radio reported in a dispatch from Algiers that Allied forces had reached a point only 12 miles from Tunis, within artillery range of the Tunisian capital. (Advices yesterday placed Allied troops less than 10 miles away.)

[At Allied headquarters in North Africa, an official announcement dated Saturday said, an Allied column is rapdily converging on Tunis and Bizerte, the International News Service reported.

[The communique said the "tempo of Allied penetration of the Tunis-Bizerte perimeter is stepping up" and the Allies are "advancing rapidly in the face of continuing German air opposition."

[Axis air activity, said the communique, was especially concentrated on strafing ground columns and Allied airfields.]

It was calculated that the heavily armored Allied force that has rolled eastward from Algeria to corner its enemy at the tip of Tunisia might have upward of 150,000 British, American and French troops to throw into the battle.

Allies Had Many Guns

The Allied Army was rich in field guns and tanks and was protected from the air by American and British bombers and crack fighting planes.

[In Washington the War Department reported yesterday that Allied planes and armored forces in Tunisia destroyed 51 enemy aircraft on the ground and in the air with a loss of 2 of our planes.

[Forty enemy planes were destroyed at one advanced airfield, a communique said.

["North Africa.

["1. Successive attacks by our planes and an armored column yesterday (Thanksgiving Day) destroyed 40 enemy planes at an advanced airfield.

["2. The Allied air forces successfully bombed enemy communications in Northeastern Tunisia, and fighter and bomber patrols attacked enemy reconnaissance units.

["3. Allied planes operating in forward areas shot down 11 enemy aircraft with the loss of 2 of our planes. Both of our pilots were saved."]

Aim to Snap Rail Line

That the main Allied assault to drive the Axis from North Africa would not be long in coming was indicated earlier in the day when the Berlin radio reported that fighting was in progress for the vital railroad junction of Mateur, 25 miles south of Bizerte. The Allied drive appeared to be aimed at snapping the only rail connection between Bizerte and Tunis and isolating the German-Italian garrisons in the two cities so that they might be destroyed separately.

The high command voted to concentrate its available manpower at strongly fortified Bizerte to meet the final Allied rush.

An Allied communique, while ignoring the thrust at Mateur, announced earlier that troops of Lieut. Gen. K. A. N. Anderson's force had captured Mejez El Bab, 30 miles southwest of Tunis, after stiff resistance and was "advancing successfully." Radio Morocco re-

Only 12,000 To See Annual Service Game

War Conditions To Slice Attendance At Battle Today

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Nov. 27.—Army and Navy play a football game in tiny Thompson Stadium here tomorrow—just for the fun of playing a football game.

Gone, through war-time necessity, are the gaudy goings-on that have attended this half-century old gridiron rivalry; gone are the parades and the hoopla and hullabaloo that annually attracted crowds of 100,000 or more to the renewal of this super-colossal production.

Gone, even, is Army's mule. Transportation problems being what they are, Army left its burro home, and will use one loaned by Farmer Bausum down the road a piece.

In place of all this "icing on the cake," the Cadets and the Middies, returning to Annapolis for the first time since 1893, will perform before a crowd of no more than 12,000 fans, according to Navy estimates. They split a gate of some $52,000 to $65,000, instead of the $100,000 apiece each was in the habit of taking home from the "super-duper" scuffles in Philadelphia's mammoth Municipal Stadium and such places.

Cadets Missing

There will be no elaborate parades of Cadets and Midshipmen. As a matter of fact, the Army academy's student body isn't even coming to this one, and West Point has "borrowed" half of the Navy's students to serve as the cadet cheering section. The Middies will march in to their seats with no fancy field drilling, and a game of football will get under way at 1:30 p. m. (E. W. T.).

And, instead of playing to customers lured from the far corners of the country, only Navy Academy neighbors will be sitting in on the fun. For, President Roosevelt's order switching this game from Philadelphia decreed that only bona fide residents of an area within 10 miles of the gleaming gold flagpole-tip atop the Maryland Statehouse in the heart of this town would be permitted to buy tickets. And Commander Morris Gilmore (retired), who handled the job, has

Action Likely Soon on Food And Oil Czars

3-Way Cabinet Shakeup to Settle Manpower Control Also Believed Near

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt was understood to be considering a three-way Cabinet shakeup last night as a means of untangling the manpower problem, with definite action overhauling the administration of three other major war problems—oil, food and production—expected in the near future.

Additional confirmation was received yesterday on the reported Cabinet shuffle, which was revealed originally in The Post Thursday morning as a "persistent report." However, it could not be learned whether the report was receiving circulation as a presidential "trial balloon" or whether the Chief Executive had definitely determined to take the reported action.

Under the plan a reorganized manpower control organization would be placed in the Department of Labor, under the direction of Secretary Interior Harold L. Ickes, who would replace Miss Frances Perkins as Secretary of Labor.

McNutt Would Replace Ickes

Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission and head of the Federal Security Administration, would relinquish his present jobs to replace Ickes as Secretary of Interior. Miss Perkins would then be moved over as Federal Security Administrator.

Net effect of the reorganization would be to elevate Ickes to the top governmental position on labor matters, with the Labor Department recapturing some of the importance that it enjoyed in former years before many of its divisions were stripped away and placed in other agencies.

An administrative order on manpower, reorganizing the machinery to control the country's labor supply and thus remove some glaring defects was understood to be on the President's desk. It was pre-

Astronomer Finds Huge New Planet

New York, Nov. 27 (INS).—Discovery of a planet outside our solar system was revealed today. The planet is 16 times heavier than Jupiter and 5000 times heavier than the earth.

Dr. K. A. Strand, a Swedish astronomer and research associate of the Sproul Observatory of Swarthmore College, Pa., has reported to the American Philosophical Society in Philadelphia that he has obtained evidence of the existence of a planet belonging to a far-away star.

The discovery is based, not upon direct observation of the planet, but upon mathematical calculations derived from seeing the star system.

Unannounced Visitor

Mme. Chiang Arrives in U. S. To Become Hospital Patient

MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

To Be Entertained At White House When Treatment Is Over

By the Associated Press

Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, wife of the Chinese generalissimo, has arrived in the United States and has entered a hospital for medical treatment, the White House announced last night.

The official announcement said the American-educated woman-leader of China was to undergo treatment for the "after effects of a serious injury suffered five years ago" when the car in which she was driving through a war sector near Shanghai blew a tire and turned over, throwing her heavily to the ground.

Upon completion of her course of treatment, the White House said, Mme. Chiang would be a guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt at the White House.

Movement Is Kept Secret

Where she landed and how she traveled was not disclosed.

The text of the White House announcement follows:

"It was announced late this afternoon that Mme. Chiang Kai-shek has arrived in the United States. She has entered a hospital for medical treatment, necessitated by the after effects of a serious injury suffered five years ago.

"During the critical period when the Chinese armies were braced against the full force of the Japanese attack in the Shanghai area, she was visiting the front. While her car was being driven at a high speed through a sector which was under heavy Japanese fire, a tire blew out. The car turned over and she was thrown heavily to the ground.

"Throughout the five and one-half years of the war, Mme. Chiang has refused to allow her impaired health to interfere with her important responsibilities.

Husband Concerned

"Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek has for some time been concerned over the way in which her heavy responsibilities were affecting Mme. Chiang's health. But it was only at the beginning of this month that she was persuaded by her attending physician to come to the United States for medical treatment.

"Upon the completion of her course of treatment, Mme. Chiang Kai-shek will be a guest of President and Mrs. Roosevelt at the White House."

Madame Chiang, a Christian like her father, was educated in America.

Now 44, the former Mei-Ling Soong was born in Shanghai, the daughter of the late Charles Jones Soong, who came to America in 1880 as a poor hammock maker and died a merchant prince. While plying his trade in North Carolina, he became a Christian, then returned to China and printed Bibles in Chinese.

He fathered a famous family. His oldest daughter married H. H. Kung, a banker and lineal descendant of Confucius. Another daughter married Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, founder of the Chinese Republic. His sons, one of whom is T. V. Soong, Chinese foreign minister who was in this country until re-

Bloc Concedes Inability to Halt Gas Rationing

Henderson Sharply Criticized; Some Say He Should Be Ousted

Congressional opponents of national gasoline rationing, conceding they lacked votes to block enforcement starting Tuesday, yesterday launched a blistering attack on Price and Ration Administrator Leon Henderson and threatened to settle up when it comes to appropriating for his agency next spring.

An end to the drive for legislation to block the Nation-wide extension of gas rationing was reported by Representative Boren (Democrat) of Oklahoma, spokesman for a group of more than 100 members who favored a 90-day postponement. "We counted noses," said Boren, "and found we had not sufficient strength to guarantee passage of legislation at this session."

Boren, like other members of the group, insisted the fight was not over, and said they would seek to tighten the purse strings on the Price Administration "if we have to get it that way."

Opponents of national rationing joined for more than two hours in the verbal barrage against Henderson, and several demanded that the President dismiss him from office.

Jeffers Testifies

Their attack came after Henderson, Rubber Administrator Jeffers, and other officials told the Senate Defense Investigating Committee that the national rationing must go through to conserve dwindling reserves of rubber.

The Senate (Truman) committee also heard Harold Ickes, Interior Secretary and petroleum coordinator, predict that "unless luck turns against us" fuel oil can be brought to the East Coast in sufficient quantities to permit 75 per cent of normal use, but he added, "That's not a promise.

Ration officials later voiced a reminder that present ration regulations permit only two-thirds of normal use, and another 10 per cent cut is under consideration, it was learned. This would lower the quota to about 56 per cent of normal, but the officials said every effort would be made to avoid further cuts in fuel oil rations for home heating.

Senator O'Mahoney reminded the Truman committee that a report of the Public Lands Committee recommended placing the five Federal agencies dealing with oil under a single head, and suggested that "that man be Ickes."

Chairman Truman (Democrat) of Missouri asked the petroleum coordinator for comment on O'Mahoney's suggestion. Ickes replied, "I couldn't improve it."

Under questioning, Jeffers and Henderson each assured the committee that administration of national rationing would be on "a common-sense basis," and that farmers, war workers and others

Soviets Score Gains on Both Flanks of Foe

Russians Advance Inside Stalingrad; Germans Reported Counterattacking

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Saturday), Nov. 28.—Russian troops were declared officially today to have seized four more villages and surrounded a fifth in the continuing Stalingrad offensive that claims a toll of more than 116,000 Nazi dead and captured, but the Red Army's pace apparently has been slowed through German resistance.

Reverting to the issuance only of the regular midnight communique instead of additional special bulletins, the Russians said their troops had scored gains on both German flanks in their efforts to encircle the entire Nazi siege army. The extent of these gains was not given.

Inside Stalingrad, the Red army also advanced 450 painful yards to occupy additional buildings, the communique said. Dispatches said the Russian garrison now had established land supply lines through contact with Red army units north of the city along the western banks of the Volga River.

Two hundred more Germans fell inside Stalingrad, the Russians said, but this fighting was only a small part of the greater enveloping battles the Soviets are fighting far to the west of Stalingrad in the Don River bend.

The Russians spoke only in general terms of this huge fight which also apparently is going on between

Radio Goes Silent As Darlan Speaks On Fleet Scuttling

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—The Algiers radio suddenly went off the air tonight in the midst of a sentence by Admiral Jean Darlan, the former defense chief who abandoned Vichy for the Allies.

Darlan, speaking on the scuttling of the French ships in Toulon today, had just criticized the admiral in command at Toulon for not heeding his suggestion of November 11 that the fleet leave Toulon and join the Allies.

"Now he has lost them (the ships) and caused the death of numerous officers and seamen," he said just before the radio stopped.

(There was no immediate explanation of the radio silence, which on European stations usually indicates hostile air activity.)

In his broadcast from Algiers Darlan said "it was evident from the very beginning that Hitler's promise not to occupy Toulon was intended to keep the French fleet" at its base.

Describing Toulon as a "trap to keep our ships under the cannon fire of the Germans," Admiral Darlan said "we now have the duty to defend [illegible] against her external enemies."

Many Defiant Crews Go Down With Their Craft in Wild Dawn Battle to Save Fleet From Axis; Hulks Make Base Useless to Foe

(Pictures, Text of Hitler Letter to Petain, Page 10.)

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—Vichy announced the suicide of the French home fleet of 60-odd ships at Toulon today and reported many French officers and dynamic crews went down with their vessels in wild dawn battles with German boarding parties attempting to prevent the scuttling of the powerful armada.

But the Germans claimed some of the vessels were saved by the quick work of Axis sappers, and full details of the harbor struggle still had not become known.

A Vichy report quoted by the Berlin radio late tonight said calm prevailed in Toulon, where "thick clouds of smoke are still rising from the roadstead."

"Explosions were heard from time to time from the ammunition chambers of the scuttled warships," it added.

After announcing the self-destruction of the French home fleet, its dockside arsenals and coastal batteries, the Vichy radio itself went off the air temporarily, returned once more to repeat the news and again was silenced.

The Swiss radio in a dispatch from Toulon said long lines of French sailors were being led in the streets as Axis prisoners.

Darlan Criticizes Officers

The Vichy station also had reported that two French submarines escaped from Toulon during the melee, in which French seamen fired their last rounds at Nazi troops before their ships sank. A third fleeing submarine was said to have struck a mine dropped by parachute from a German warplane.

(A British broadcast heard in New York quoted "an Allied source" as saying "some French destroyers" had escaped from Toulon and were on the way to join the Allied forces in North Africa. These ships, the B. B. C. pointed out, were in addition to the two submarines previously reported to have escaped.)

Admiral Jean Darlan, former Vichy defense chief who went over to the Allies in North Africa, apparently accepted the Vichy version of what had happened. He was heard on the Algiers radio criticizing the French Toulon officers for not heeding his appeal of November 11 for the Toulon fleet to flee to North Africa.

The toll of French casualties in the fighting at Toulon is mounting, the Vichy radio said late tonight before it again went off the air.

Rome Blames Intrigue

The Rome radio version said Axis occupation authorities had made repeated efforts to gain guarantees from the Toulon fleet to resist any Allied invasion from North Africa, and blamed the scuttling on "Anglo-Saxon intrigue."

In his broadcast from Algiers Admiral Darlan said "it was evident from the very beginning that Hitler's promise not to occupy Toulon was intended to keep the French fleet" at its base so it could be seized when the Germans were ready.

The Germans did not concede the complete destruction of the fleet, which would amount to a colossal naval victory for the Allied side.

The Berlin radio said sappers among the forces overrunning the last bit of France rushed aboard some vessels in time to tear away explosive charges that would have sunk them.

End of French Naval Power

Before going off the air the Vichy radio had reported the scuttling of the fleet as a heroic episode in French history and there was the obvious suggestion that the coup was carried out after long deliberation and the firm decision never to give up the ships—to the Axis.

In all, the eventful day brought

A Grand Armada

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Navy spokesmen said yesterday that Axis warships and planes have been patroling outside Toulon Harbor for some time and that the French fleet there probably could not have escaped if it had tried.

Capt. Leland P. Lovette, Navy public relations director, told reporters that the narrowness of the entrance to the harbor would have made it relatively simple for the enemy to sink or bottle up the French warships in case they had made a run for it.

Officers and crews of the vessels apparently decided "they couldn't get through," he said at Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox's press conference late yesterday.

Information Lacking

Both Lovette and Knox, however, made it plain that they had no information other than the published accounts of the reported German occupation of Toulon and scuttling of the French ships.

Meanwhile, military men here predicted that even if Hitler was able to take over any of the French fleet undamaged, he probably could not put it into action in time to play any part in the African campaign.

They declared that it would take many weeks or months for German crews to get the ships ready for action and forecast that the Axis would be knocked entirely out of Africa before then. Chief value of the warships in Axis hands would be in helping block Allied occupation of all of North Africa, they said.

Captain Lovette said that for some time Italian warships and German submarines have been patroling outside Toulon Harbor and Nazi bombers have also watched

December District Tire Quota To Be 350% of November's

The Office of Price Administration yesterday granted the District of Columbia a December quota of tires that is three and a half times that of November.

Quotas throughout the rest of the country were also stepped up.

The District received a December allotment of 9037 tires, 6344 recapping services, and 2624 tubes, compared with 2571 tires, 8233 recapping services and 1338 tubes in November.

The District's quota included 4818 Grade 3 tires (recapped, used, or new tires made of reclaimed rubber) which were made available as a result of the turning in of excess of tires. A total of 2153 of the December allotment are Grade 1, for cars allowed to drive more than 1000 miles a month, and 2066 are Grade 2, for cars allowed to drive between 560 and 1000 miles a month. Grade 3 tires which were not available in November are for cars driving under 560 miles.

The increases were allowed to take care of anticipated needs under the new mileage rationing program which makes virtually all passenger cars eligible to apply for recapping services or replacement tires.

The increased allotments are based on the theory that tires given out after December 1, when Nation-wide gasoline rationing goes into effect, will last longer than tires previously issued because mileage will be controlled.

Meanwhile, it was learned that Government officials, concerned about possible black markets appearing in hitherto unrationed areas, particularly in oil producing States, have decided to step up an educational campaign to convince the country of the need to conserve rubber.

The national total of passenger car tires and recapping services combined available in December is 2,301,342, compared to 1,285,189 in November.

Army Plan to Convert Colleges Into Training Bases Revealed

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 27.—Lieut. Col. Harley B. West of the War Department General Staff disclosed today a plan for the large-scale conversion of American colleges and universities into training bases for the armed forces, which he said would be announced in detail within two weeks.

In a carefully worded outline of the plan Colonel West told a meeting of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools that students would be selected from "young men in the Army who have demonstrated the aptitude to receive such higher education" and that they would live under Army discipline and receive regular Army pay while in training.

Earlier Dr. Edmund E. Day, president of Cornell University, announced that as many as 250,000 servicemen would be sent to college under this plan.

Although military representatives refused to divulge details of the plan, they emphasized that the Government would not take over any of the colleges to which servicemen would be sent for courses lasting from nine months to more than two years.

"Any relation between the armed services and collegiate institutions is going to be purely voluntary and there is to be no requisitioning," Colonel West said.

Joseph W. Barker, dean of the Columbia University School of Engineering and special assistant to Secretary of the Navy Knox, told the educators: "There is no desire on the part of either the Army or the Navy to dictate to you what you must do. We are hoping to give you a maximum of leeway in the presentation of material and a maximum of academic freedom."

Colonel West said that emphasis in instruction would be placed on scientific and technical courses. Military training would be subordinated to academic work, he said.

Harbor of Toulon Scene of Desolation

War Sidelights

Nazi Head Of France Has Good Record

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—Field Marshal Gen. Karl Rudolf Gerd von Rundstedt, placed in complete military and civil command of all France today by Adolf Hitler, is a thin-lipped, aristrocratic 67-year-old Prussian, with perhaps the most brilliant record of any German officer in the present war.

His name leaped to prominence in the opening phases of the conflict when he commanded the Nazi armies that plunged across Poland, and his part in the defeat of the country he now has contracted to govern was significant. His armies were the first to break through at Sedan, stabbing the vital organ of the French defensive system.

Fellow officers, decrying the lack of ability of this or that party favorite elevated by Hitler to military prominence, like to say: "He is such a fool he doesn't even take the advice of General Rundstedt."

At the start of the Russian campaign Rundstedt was sent to that front, where his armies made deep thrusts into the Ukraine, occupied Kiev and generally developed the most successful offensive of the campaign. But when his armies attempted to push on to the oil wealth of the Caucasus they were badly mauled by the Russians' magnificent counteroffensive at Rostov and Rundstedt was reported to have asked to be relieved of command.

R. A. F. Commands Shifted

London, Saturday, Nov. 28 (AP).—Air Chief Marshal Sir Edward William Tedder, commanding the British Air Forces in the Middle East since May, 1941, will become vice chief of staff of the air forces as part of a series of changes among high R. A. F. officers to become effective in the "near future," the Air Ministry announced today.

He will be succeeded in the Middle East by Air Chief Marshal William Sholto Douglas, chief of the Fighter Command of the Air Forces.

Air Marshal T. W. Leigh-Mallory, who commanded the big August air raid on Nazi-held Dieppe, will take over Douglas' post as head of the fighter command.

Air Marshal Joubert de la Ferte, at present heading the coastal command, will become inspector general of the R. A. F. His successor will be Air Marshal J. C. Slesser, who will be promoted to acting air marshal.

Nazi Undersea Device

Stockholm, Nov. 27 (U.P.).—A Berlin dispatch to the newspaper Aftonbladet said today that the Germans have developed an "underwater smoke screen" which spouts a blue-green color in the water, thus making submarines invisible much as the octopus makes itself invisible by secreting a cloud of sepic. The dispatch said the device now is being used in the Mediterranean.

De Gaulle Says Fleet Scuttling Unites France

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—Gen. Charles de Gaulle said in a broadcast to France tonight that French sailors scuttled the Toulon fleet "so that the nation might at least be spared the supreme shame of seeing her ships become ships of the enemy."

Breaking the radio silence of the Fighting French to urge Frenchmen "on to victory," De Gaulle declared:

"At the moment when the ships were about to be seized by the enemy patriotic instinct has swayed the spirits of their crews and their commanders. In one brief instant captains, officers and ratings saw through the odious veil of lies which since June, 1940, has hung before their eyes. In one brief instant they understood to what terrible end they had been led."

The Fighting French leader said France heard in the explosions at Toulon "desperate shots fired in a last stand. . . . The tremor of pain, pity and rage shook the whole country."

"Through this tragedy, added to so many tragedies," asserted, "France stands firm and united—yes united—in her determination to wipe out in victory all the atrocious consequences of disaster and betrayal.

"On to victory! There is no other road—there never was."

Portugal Desires Peace, Says Chief

Lisbon, Nov. 27 (AP).—Gen. Antonio Oscar de Fragoso Carmona, President of Portugal, today expressed his country's firm determination to "maintain unaltered friendly relations" with both neutral and belligerent countries at the opening session of the National Legislative Assembly.

Carmona emphasized friendly relations with the United States and Great Britain, and said Portugal's "respectable, dignifying and merciful neutrality" is universally appreciated as "of general advantage to all."

Dense Smoke Clouds Form Pall Over Scuttled French Craft

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—The Vichy radio broadcast a poignant description of the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon and the brief battle put up against the Axis at the great naval base today. Then the radio explained it was going off the air indefinitely "because of events" in France.

Later the Vichy radio came back on and then broadcast intermittently. Here was its Toulon story broadcast just before it had said it would go off the air.

"Dawn broke on a scene of utter desolation with all the magnificent ships of the French navy lying on their sides with dense clouds of smoke rising from them.

"The maritime prefecture, the postoffice and the town hall fell quickly into the hands of the German troops who swarmed in through the windows from ladders placed against the walls," said the radio account.

"A column of German tanks and armored cars entered the arsenal by the Castigneau gate and dashed full speed to the Milhaud docks, where the battleship Strasbourg was moored.

Ships Scuttled

"Another German motorized column brought soldiers armed with tommy guns to the Vauban Basin, in which the battleship Dunkerque was undergoing repairs and in front of which the cruisers Foch, Algerie, Duquesne and Jean de Vienne, together with a number of light cruisers, destroyers and corvettes were moored.

"A sudden explosion rent the air. It came from the Strasbourg, which had just scuttled itself. Explosion after explosion followed as all other ships in the harbor and the French coastal batteries blew themselves up.

"On some ships preparations for the scuttling were not quite ready so the sailors opened fire on the Germans to keep them off until the explosions wrecked the ships.

"There were many casualties both among the defenders and the scuttling crews who sacrificed their lives to prevent the ships from falling into the hands of the Germans.

Went Down With Ships

"All captains stood on the bridge until their ships sank. Most of them lost their lives.

"The town echoed to the rattle of German lorries carrying French prisoners who maintained a calm and dignified front while their captors stood over them with fixed bayonets.

"Even after daybreak the noise of the explosions continued as isolated small ships blew themselves up, while massive roars from the munition dumps and oil tanks at some distance from the docks added their quota to the wreckage.

"There was absolutely nothing left of the complicated and precious material stored in the naval arsenal.

"In the early afternoon the mayor of Toulon sisued an order for the closing of all cinemas, theaters and public places at 10 p. m., although no restriction had been placed on the movements of the population in the streets."

over the French naval base there.

"Seawalls at Toulon, as at Marseilles" he contniued, "give the harbor a very narrow entrance. It is no wider than twice the distance across Constitution Avenue.

(Constitution Avenue is 80 feet wide. Battleships run from 97 to 108 feet in width.)

"If the French had attempted to come out, German planes could have bombed them and probably blocked the harbor by sinking the leading ships. The subs and warships would be waiting for any that got through."

Secretary Knox said that there were 3 battleships, 4 heavy cruisers, 3 light cruisers, 18 destroyers leaders, 15 destroyers and probably 21 submarines at Toulon. The battleships were the Dunkerque and Strasburg, 29-knot craft of 27,000 tons, "more battle cruisers than battleships and built as an answer to the German pocket-battleships," and the old 22,000-ton Provence, he said.

Some of these ships, however, were probably unusable, as they had been stripped of equipment to keep others ready for sea, Knox said.

He described as "'interesting," though without confirmation, several of the reports which had "'come over the wires." One was that some of the French warships had fired at each other at point-blank range to be sure that the fleet was sunk beyond hope of salvage. It might be easy for the Germans to raise vessels if only their sea-cocks were opened.

ADMIRAL JEAN de LABORDE issued the order which resulted in the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon, according to a Vichy radio broadcast

French Fleet Scuttling Like Scapa Flow Act

The scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon yesterday recalled the historic event of June 21, 1919, when the German high sea fleet was scuttled during internment at Scapa Flow.

The circumstances were vastly different even though the reasons for the scuttlings were the same—to prevent the navies from falling into the hands of another government.

In the case of the Germans at Scapa Flow, the scuttling was carried out well after the first World War ended. Nevertheless, German sailors did not wish to suffer the humiliation of seeing their finest warships under another flag.

The German scuttling occurred under the eyes of the British but the latter's navy was powerless to prevent it because her Allies would not permit her to take over the German fleet, which merely was interned with officers and crews intact.

In all, approximately 70 German ships were scuttled. They included the pride of the imperial German Navy—the Kaiser Frederich der Grosse, the Koenig Albert, Moltke, Brummer, Markgraf, Kronprinz Wilhelm, Dresden, Kaiser, Prinzeregent Luitpold, Derfflinger, Karlsruhe, Koln, Von der Tann and Hindenburg. In addition to the foregoing, all battleships or battle cruisers, several cruisers and numerous destroyers were scuttled.

Efforts to salvage some of the ships began in 1924. Twenty-five destroyers were raised in the next few years. In 1927 the first of the heavy units were salvaged. The 23,500-ton battle cruiser Moltke. Two years later the battleship Kaiser and the cruiser Bremse were raised. In 1934 the 23,000-ton battle cruiser Bayern was raised. Next to be salvaged were the Kaiserin and the Kaiser Frederich der Grosse, flagship of Admiral Reinhard Scheer at the Battle of Jutland.

Scrap metal from the scuttled ships helped build two of Britain's great liners, the Queen Mary and the Queen Elizabeth.

Scuttled Fleet Valued at Nearly 300 Million Dollars

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—When the French reportedly sank their fleet at Toulon today to keep it from Nazi clutches, it was a sacrifice to pride and patriotism which cost hundreds of millions of dollars.

The exact price is incalculable because of the vagaries of international exchange but, reckoned on the costs for building comparable British and American warships, this—on the basis of the Vichy report that all ships were scuttled—is what France willingly consigned to the bottom of Toulon Harbor:

Three battleships at 35 million dollars—105 million dollars.

Four cruisers at 15 million dollars—60 million dollars.

Three cruisers at 10 million dollars—30 million dollars.

A seaplane tender—two million dollars.

Twenty-five destroyers at two million dollars—50 million dollars.

Twenty-six submarines at $1,500,000—39 million dollars.

Total, 286 million dollars.

These estimates are conservative. They do not include lesser sloops and auxiliaries which were in Toulon Harbor. If all were sunk, the French Navy's tribute to its honor probably cost in excess of 300 million dollars.

More Than 60 Warships Reported Scuttled by French Crews at Toulon

the end of French naval power in any hands; the end of even semi-free expression from Vichy; the end of any semblance of freedom in metropolitan France as the result of the predawn Axis occupation of Toulon and environs, which had been curiously spared since November 11; a firm German military command in all France and the demobilization of the French army and navy.

The French coup not only removed the French fleet from the Axis clutch but it also so cluttered the Toulon anchorages with the smoking hulks that the finest continental naval base in the Mediterranean is probably useless to Hitler.

The sharp clash of arms between the French, fighting for time to carry out the scuttlings, and the Germans, bent on grabbing what they could ahead of the explosions, was hailed from London by Gen. Charles de Gaulle, leader of the Fighting French.

De Gaulle Breaks Silence

He broke a week-long silence maintained by the Fighting French over the American acceptance of Admiral Darlan as a cooperator in North Africa.

De Gaulle's view was that the French at Toulon scuttled the fleet "so that the nation might at least be spared the supreme shame of seeing her ships become ships of the enemy."

"At the moment when the ships were about to be seized by the enemy, patriotic instinct swayed the spirits of the crews and their commanders," De Gaulle said. "In one brief instant, the captains, officers and ratings saw through the odious veil of lies which since June, 1940, hung before their eyes."

Hitler discarded old promises again in the sudden occupation of Toulon early this morning on the pretexts that:

1—The fleet had been given orders on November 12 not to resist an Anglo-American force planning to land in the naval base.

2—The warships intended to put to sea "as planned"'—presumably to join the Allies in North Africa in response to a bid from Admiral Jean Darlan, the Allies' missioner of expediency in Algeria.

3—It was necessary to "demobilize unsure contingents of the French army."

These "unsure contingents" ashore and the naval crews put up resistance against the onrush of the Germans and Italians.

Vichy broadcasts described the scene at Toulon as one of utter desolation, "with all the magnificent ships of the French navy lying on their sides and with dense clouds of smoke rising from them."

Toulon's public buildings were immediately seized by Germans climbing through windows from ladders, but the columns simultaneously dashing for the docks in futile efforts to stop the scuttling found trouble.

As Germans with tommy-guns ran along the piers of the Vauban basin, beside the battleship Dunkerque, which was under repair, and past a line of cruisers, a sudden explosion roared.

It was the last blast of the 26,000-ton battleship Strasbourg, which had just scuttled herself. Other explosions followed in chorus and separately to salute the passing of a great navy, while the French coastal batteries blew themselves to pieces.

French sailors not quite ready to scuttle held off the advancing Germans with gunfire until they could sink their ships.

"There were many casualties, both among the defenders and the scuttling crews who sacrificed their lives to prevent the ships from falling into the hands of the Germans," Vichy accounts said.

"All captains stood on the bridge until their ships sank. Most of them lost their lives. . . .

"There was absolutely nothing left of the complicated and precious material stored in the naval arsenal."

The first word of the scuttling came from the Berlin radio, which said "part" of the fleet had been sunk by their crews.

Then a Vichy broadcast announced:

"By orders of Admiral De La Borde, vessels of the French squadron at Toulon scuttled themselves.

"At 10 a. m. there was not one vessel afloat."

Toulon had been curiously spared from occupation when Hitler sent his armored columns across the demarcation line into then unoccupied France on November 11 to hastily reinforce southern Europe against the new threat of Allied armies sweeping over North Africa from east and west.

Unable to Join Darlan

The German occupation forces were then pulled up at Marseille and the Italians by-passed Toulon to the north, with the Hitler explanation that he had assurances that the fleet would resist all aggression and take care of itself.

Then Admiral Darlan, cooperating with the Allies in Algeria, asked the officers of his old naval command to come over to the Allied side with their ships and crews—an escape regarded as hazardous in the extreme under the eye of the German air force.

Unable to flee alive the naval command at Toulon took the next best course—scuttling—when the Germans determined to storm the great naval base for the showdown with the defiant warships.

The French were ready for Hitler's last violation of armistice and subsequent promises.

"At 4 a. m.," the Vichy radio said, "German troops made an entry into Toulon.

"Armored columns made their way immediately to the arsenal, which they entered by the Castigneau gate. At this moment Admiral de la Borde gave the order to scuttle which was immediately carried out."

Before dawn, as the troops were entering the city, German bombers lit up the harbor with flares and sowed a barrier of mines across the entrance to the roadstead to cut off any avenue of desperate escape.

Then followed the first officially mentioned French resistance to the German armed forces since the armistice was signed in June of 1940.

In obvious fear of revolt within France and of the consequences of the Allied dispositions in North Africa, Hitler took away the last vestige of freedom in France.

He told Marshal Petain in a letter that Field Marshall Karl Rudolf Gerd von Rundstedt "will be in charge of all measures deemed necessary and will take all decisions in French territory."

With reference to the fighting and other anti-Vichy French and their friends, Hitler told Petain: "I am determined not to, in any case, give Europe over to chaos by allowing a free hand to these agitators."

"I sincerely hope it will be possible," Hitler wrote, "to give back to France an army whose officers at least obey the chief of state.

"I am convinced you took no part in any of these activities, but I am compelled to carry this war through to the end."

Under the armistice all French army and navy forces were demobilized, but the French were allowed to maintain an army of 80,000 men, and the Toulon fleet achieved a sort of autonomy, too hard for the Axis to crack.

Report Says Genoa Raids Forced Axis To Take Toulon

London (Saturday), Nov. 28. (AP). The London Daily Mail today quoted authoritative quarters as saying Hitler marched into Toulon because he was forced to acquire a new base to replace bombed and immobilized Genoa as the supply port for Tunisia and Africa.

The reported scuttling of the French fleet at the same time solved a naval problem for the Allied naval staffs, because Allied navies had been forced into a disposition of warships which often was disadvantageous so long as the French fleet existed.

How seriously the use of Toulon Harbor was affected by the scuttling was hard to say, these sources declared, because it still was not known where the ships were riding at anchor.

Most of them, however, were believed to have been naval berths in the inner harbor, where the hulls would interfere with operation of the port.

WAAC EXPANDED BY EXECUTIVE ORDER!

New facilities and enlarged opportunities for training as WAAC to be increased six times original size

"The Army lost your unsounded it needed the knowledge, skill, and special training of the women of the nation for the war effort, and the women of the nation are responding in thousands by joining the WAAC. There are scores of jobs, from typing to driving, which the Army feels women can do to release men for combat duty—and all the women ask, when they sign up, is, 'Give us a chance to help any way we can!'"
—OVETA CULP HOBBY, Director, WAAC

By executive order of The President, the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps is authorized to recruit to the full strength of 150,000 authorized by Congress. And December 1st, another training center opens in Daytona Beach, Florida.

The WAAC is giving valuable service to the Army. The list of essential duties it is performing grows constantly. Never before in U. S. history have there been such opportunities for alert, patriotic women — opportunities to serve our country in its hour of need — opportunities for advancement, training and experience which will be valuable in the post-war world.

If you long to do your share in America's drive to victory, join this new, expanding corps now. See the partial list of jobs below. See the pay scale and ranks which now are equivalent to the Army's. Enrollment is open to women 21 to 44, inclusive, regardless of race, creed or color—all officers are commissioned from the ranks.

Every WAAC knows her contribution is helping the nation directly, personally—her work behind the lines, here and overseas, releases a soldier for the battlefront.

Here is your chance to do the work of a soldier so that he may fight. For full information see your local U. S. Army Recruiting and Induction Station today.

'Stiff Fight' Ahead In Tunisia—Stimson

In One Hour

District Man Led Flight, Got 9 Nazis

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—A first-hand account of how a single flight of United States Flying Fortresses whipped a flock of attacking German fighters and destroyed nine of them over the Bay of Biscay in last Monday's raid on the U-boat base at St. Nazaire, France, was given today by the men who participated.

One Fortress alone, piloted by First Lieut. William J. Casey of San Francisco, accounted for seven enemy planes in 12 minutes and two others fell victims to the gunners of other planes in the hour-long fight.

Casey and his mates said the flight, commanded by Maj. Harry Holt of Chevy Chase, Md., was jumped by a strong formation of Focke-Wulf 190s as it neared the target. Despite intense opposition, Casey's plane was guided to its target by the navigator, Second Lieut. Walter C. Leeker of St. Louis, Mo., and by Bombardier Lieut. Albert G. Smith of Phoenix, Ariz.

Close Fighting

When the formation turned for home over the Bay of Biscay, the enemy planes which had been attacking from long range closed in, sometimes pressing their attack to as close as 50 feet.

Casey's log showed that the first Nazi victim was picked up by the sights of tailgunner Sergt. Parley D. Small, a farm boy from Fairfield, Iowa. He gave it a long burst and the enemy fell apart in the air, the pilot taking to his parachute.

At almost the same instant another fighter attacking from astern got a single burst from waist gunner Staff Sergt. Reginald D. Harris of Houston, Tex., and spun into the sea.

Six other Focke-Wulfs attacked in unison. Ball turret gunner Sergt. Joe Bowles of Roanoke, Va., promptly shot one down in flames, and at the same instant Sergt. Wilson C. Elliott of Knoxville, Tenn., a former shipping clerk, loosened a burst that sent another fighter down trailing flames. Harris raised his tally to two when he shot up another fighter so badly its pilot was forced to bail out.

Nazi Attacked From Above

From the ball turret Bowles also got another clean shot, and his apponent blew up and plunged into the sea. The last Nazi, attacking from above, was a victim of Private Allan F. Meaux of Madison, Wis., who fired two bursts from the port waist gun and saw the enemy crash into the water.

When the noise of the engagement suddenly stopped the "silence seemed startling," said Private Harold F. Lightbrown of Winthrop, Mass., the radio operator.

The two other Nazi victims were credited to Second Lieut. Lemuel B. Smith of Birmingham, Ala., navigator in the plane piloted by First Lieut. Earl C. Tunnell of Albuquerque, N. Mex., and to Private Robert G. Mumaw of Bloomington, Ind., flying with Major Holt.

War Secretary Gives Cheering Picture of World Battle Fronts

Secretary of War Stimson foresaw a "stiff fight" for the final mastery of Tunisia yesterday and said the Axis was resorting to "booby bombs" in an effort to slow down the Allied advance.

Such bombs consist of wallets, watches, notebooks and the like, left as though abandoned in retreat. When picked up by a curious soldier, they explode.

At a press conference, Stimson briefly reviewed developments on virtually all the major fighting fronts.

There was every indication that the Germans had suffered a "major reverse" in Russia, he said. He described the Russian counter-attack as particularly remarkable.

Solomons Situation Improved

In "one of the outstanding operations of the war," forces under Gen. Douglas MacArthur had cornered a considerable number of Japanese in a pocket on the coast of New Guinea, after fighting their way through dense jungles.

Admiral William T. Halsey's "remarkable victory" in the Solomons had altered the situation there considerably. However, a struggle lay ahead before the Japs are driven from Guadalcanal. In all probability the Japanese navy will strike again in that area.

Axis forces, fleeing before the British in Libya, were expected to make a stand at El Agheila, where a narrow pass between the sea and salt marshes offered strong defensive possibilities. The British pursuit has been retarded by bad weather.

Bad weather also had hampered operations against the Japanese in the Aleutian Islands, but American fliers "are taking advantage of every good day to make the Japs at Kiska as uncomfortable as possible."

Terrain Favors Axis

As for Tunisia, Stimson said the Axis was believed to have brought in about one full division, 12,000 to 15,000 troops. These forces were holding a 30- to 35-mile strip along the Gulf of Tunis, including the cities of Bizerte, Tunis, Sfax and Gabes, all of which have excellent airports.

The mountainous Tunisian terrain was particularly favorable for defense, he continued, and the Germans are holding strong positions. To dislodge them the Allied command is now preparing an assault force.

Organizing this force, however, involves moving men and supplies over a distance of several hundred miles from Algeria, and such movements are subject to frequent attack by planes based in Sicily and Sardinia. In addition to the usual bombing, Axis planes, he said, were scattering thousands of pyramidal spikes, designed to cut the tires of airplanes and motor vehicles.

Desperate Jap Attacks Thrown Back at Buna

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in Australia, Saturday, Nov. 28.—The Jap ground troops entrapped along New Guinea's north shore between Gona and Buna have been repulsed in attempts to counterattack against the Americans and Australians, the high command's noon communique said today.

The Japs, recently reinforced from the sea by special shock troops at a cost of at least five warships, suffered heavy losses in the counterattacks which were local in character. Allied planes added to the toll by bombing and strafing the enemy ground forces.

The communique reported a "step by step advance" through the nests of dugouts and the barbed wire barricades of the Japs.

Allied bombers attacked the airdrome at Lae, up the north New Guinea Coast from Buna, and dropped bombs in Huon Gulf on a Jap submarine, a night activity which precluded observation of results.

Other Allied planes returned to a frequently bombed sector, Portuguese Timor, destroying enemy-occupied buildings at Nova Lusa and Beco.

Two Die as Negro Troops Fight M.P.'s in Three-Hour Riot

By the Associated Press

Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 27.—Long-standing bad feeling between Negro soldiers and Negro military police flared into a furious three-hour gun battle early today which left two men dead and 12 persons wounded.

With the aid of civil authorities, the Army put down the bloody riot and sent heavily armed and reinforced military police into the 28-block bullet-scarred fighting area to maintain order.

Approximately 300 soldiers and 100 military and civil police were involved.

Authorities rounded up 152 Negro soldiers and several civilians, including two women.

Col. Fred Ellis, commander of the Negro detachment stationed here, ordered an investigation to determine the cause of the trouble and how the soldiers obtained guns and ammunition.

Chief of Police Don C. Steward, who led civil forces called out to help quell the riot, said he believed the battle was the result of antagonism between Negro soldiers and Negro miltiary police.

Trouble was brewing all night and was set off when a military policeman shot and wounded a soldier for resisting arrest after the trooper had hit a Negro girl on the head with a bottle.

About 150 soldiers were lined up awaiting buses to return to camp, after an initial outbreak had been quieted, when the gun battle began.

A jeep carrying Negro military police arrived. Close behind it came a car filled with armed soldiers. A shot was fired by an unidentified person as an "M. P." got out of the jeep.

Firing continued for nearly three hours as military and city police closed in on the rioters who were armed with rifles, pistols and at least one tommy gun.

A Negro soldier, whose identity has not been announced, and Robert Riley, 44, Negro civilian, were killed.

Wounded were First Lieut. August J. Essman, 39, of Sheridan, Wyo., and two other white military policemen, two Negro military policemen, a white city police officer, a Negro city police officer, four Negro soldiers and a 17-year-old Negro girl.

Abandoned guns and ammunition were picked up around the battle area during the day and soldiers were apprehended as they emerged from hiding places.

Riots Reported In Border Towns Of Alsace-Lorraine

London (Saturday), Nov. 28 (INS). Fighting in the streets of Strasbourg, Metz and Mulhouse in Alsace-Lorraine, was reported today in a dispatch to the London Daily Express from "the French frontier."

Riots broke out throughout the territory after the Nazis took drastic action to ensure the complete Germanization of Alsace-Lorraine, the dispatch said.

"Vast numbers" of Frenchmen in the area were deported for work in Silesian mines, said the Express, adding that only inhabitants able to prove German parentage and German sympathies were allowed to remain in the territory.

Although unrest was reported throughout the territory bordering on Germany, Metz in Lorraine and Strasbourg and Mulhouse, both in Alsace, were the scenes of the most active resistance.

French Admiral Defied Nazis At Toulon, Scuttled His Fleet

By International News Service

London (Saturday), Nov. 28.—How Admiral Jean de la Borde defied a Nazi order to turn the French fleet at Toulon over to a German naval commission Friday morning and, instead, ordered the vessels scuttled was described today in an Exchange Telegraph dispatch.

The message, which reached London from Marseille by way of Zurich, reported that when Nazi panzer units entered Toulon a German commander demanded that De la Borde surrender the fleet "in accordance with instructions and orders of the Laval government." Pointing out that enemy artillery and bombing planes commanded the harbor, the Nazi officer insisted the vessels be turned over to a commission of naval and military experts. Should any attempt be made to scuttle the ships, to resist or to leave port, Nazi planes and artillery would attack, he told De la Borde.

The French admiral replied: "I'll open fire on anyone endeavoring to enter our ships!"

In open defiance, De la Borde ordered several ships scuttled and then tried to leave the port, whereupon Nazi bombers roared into action. Whether their bombs had any effect, and if so, to what extent they damaged the fleet, was not known, the dispatch said, but at 10 a. m. De la Borde informed Marshal Henri Petain that the entire fleet no longer existed.

De la Borde and all surviving naval officers were arrested, the dispatch added.

Jap General Completes Tour Of Burma Front

By the Associated Press

Tokyo (From Japanese Broadcasts), Nov. 27.—Gen. Count Juichi Terauchi, commander in chief of all Japanese forces in southeastern Asia, has just completed a two-week tour of the Burma front, Domei reported today in a dispatch datelined "Headquarters of the Southern Military Regions."

Terauchi's tour was undertaken after the close of the rainy season, Domei said.

There have been numerous reports of revived Japanese activity in southeastern Asia, with indications that a major offensive against China's southwestern province of Yunnan was in preparation and was to be launched soon after the end of the rainy season, which has kept that theater inactive for six months.

A Chinese army spokesman said at Chungking last night that the Japanese were sending troop and plane reinforcements into northern Burma, northern Thailand and northern Indo-China, all adjoining Yunnan.

Informed observers have seen in these moves indications that Japan would seek to hold the initiative in Southeastern Asia by attacking Yunnan before the Allies could launch an offensive from India against the Japanese now holding Burma.

Capture of Yunnan would bring the Japanese perilously near Generalisimo Chiang Kai-shek's capital at Chungking and would further seal the Japanese hold on China's back door, through which Allied aid was sent before Burma fell.

Pelley's Daughter Arrested by FBI

ADELAIDE M. PELLEY

2 More Sinkings Announced; Ship Losses Now 541

Torpedoing of two more medium-sized merchantmen, one Canadian and the other Norwegian, was revealed by the Navy yesterday, lifting to 541 the total of announced Allied and neutral losses in the western Atlantic since Pearl Harbor.

Late in August, the Navy disclosed, the Norwegian ship was sunk in the Caribbean after firing on the undersea raider. Thirteen Chinese crewmen, landed at an East Coast port, were unable to say how many were lost.

In the sinking of the Canadian vessel in November, also in the Caribbean, 19 crewmen were believed to have perished. Eight others climbed aboard four rafts and a United States naval ship picked them up 16 hours later.

Pelley's Kin 4 Others Held On U.S. Charge

The Justice Department yesterday announced the arrest of the daughter of William Dudley Pelley, the Silver Shirt leader, and four other persons on charges of conspiring to harbor Howard Victor Broenstrup during the four months he was a fugitive from a charge of seditious conspiracy. Those arrested were:

Adelaide Marian Pelley of Noblesville, Ind., whose father has been convicted of sedition.

Marguerite M. Carmichael of Noblesville, who the FBI said was with Broenstrup when he was arrested Monday in a cottage near New Galilee, Pa.

Victor Hoye of New Castle, Pa., described as "one of the foremost Silver Shirt leaders in western Pennsylvania and a substantial financial contributor to the Pelley movement."

Frank W. Mariner of Poland, Ohio, who is alleged to have furnished Broenstrup with food and other supplies.

Henry Meine of near New Galilee, who the FBI said had contributed financially to the Pelley movement and furnished Broenstrup with food and other provisions.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover reported Miss Carmichael became acquainted with Broenstrup several years ago, "when the latter was actively associated with Pelley's work" and in recent months "she has been an almost constant companion of Broenstrup's."

The FBI said Miss Pelley had long been active with her father in the work of the Silver Shirts and Pelley's Fellowship Press; that while Broenstrup was in hiding in western Pennsylvania she sought to communicate with him for the purpose of sending him clothing and other materials.

Proceedings have been instituted for removal of Miss Pelley and Mariner to Pittsburgh, "where they will face prosecution with the others arrested," the FBI said.

Woman Acquitted In Mate's Death, Rejoins Children

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—With the cry, "I'll never, never leave them," Mrs. Anna Harrington, acquitted four days ago of a charge of first-degree murder of her husband, Alman, was reunited today with her four small children.

The 21-year-old mother hugged and kissed the children in the courtroom after Bronx Supreme Court Justice Charles B. McLaughlin awarded her custody. The three boys and a girl had been in the care of Mrs. Florence Kelly Cammarata, foster-mother of Mrs. Harrington's dead husband.

Harrington was shot in the spine last June during an argument with his wife over $3.

Trial for Woman In Slaying of Army Officer Set Dec. 8

Bisbee, Ariz., Nov. 27 (AP).—Trial of Margaret Herlihy on a charge of murder was set today for December 8 by Superior Judge William G. Hall, assigned to the case by Gov. Sidney P. Osborn.

The 21-year-old red-haired daughter of Lieut. Col. E. G. Herlihy is accused of slaying Capt. David D. Carr, to whom she was secretly married.

Over the objections of the county attorney, Judge Hall authorized defense counsel to use depositions of witnesses in other States. Among them is Alice Lippolt, who Defense Attorney Frank Thomas said is "sometimes known as Alice Carr."

The prosecution contends that Carr was shot August 15 at Douglas, Ariz., in a quarrel over his tangled marital affairs.

ported that French forces under Gen. Henri Honore Giraud were racing eastward in cooperation with their Allies.

The swift pace of the Allied advance, as it gathered up loose ends preparatory to striking with its full weight, proved to military observers that Anderson was alert to the rush of Axis reinforcements from Sicily and intended to launch his main assault at the earliest possible moment.

"Naval and land forces have been able to pour men and materials into Tunisia," the Berlin radio said, adding that "development of Axis forces was still in progress."

It was estimated, however, that the Allies might be able to send as many as 150,000 men, many of them British veterans of hard fighting in France, into the battle to throw the Axis from its last foothold in Tunisia. Preliminary brushes, in which Axis tanks took a bad beating, indicated, too, that the Allies were hauling up great quantities of artillery.

Air fighting continued to rage as Allied bombers, protected by fighters, loosed loads of high explosives on the air fields at Tunis and Bizerte and battled the Axis craft that rose to meet them. A delayed Allied communique reported that American and British planes destroyed at least 22 enemy aircraft in combat and on the ground during Wednesday and Thursday.

Ten enemy planes were destroyed on the ground at Tunis, the report said. The R. A. F. acknowledged loss of seven planes, but said pilots of three of them landed safely. The Berlin radio offered no figures in support of its statement that the Axis had gained aerial superiority over Tunisia.

An Italian communique related that a clash of armored cars occured in Tunisia, "ending in favor of Axis forces," but did not specify the site of the engagement. It also told of Axis planes machine-gunning Allied forces on the march.

Allied aerial activity appeared not to have been hampered by the first rains of the North African wet season, but ground troops of the First Army probably were slowed somewhat as they negotiated the foothills of the Atlas Mountains in their drive toward Bizerte.

For the first time since the British Eighth Army smashed Marshal Erwin Rommel's Africa Corps at El Alamein on October 23, the Middle East Command said there was "nothing to report" from its land forces in Libya, and that aerial activity was limited. It revealed, though, that its medium bombers were ranging far westward to blast Rommel's line of retreat and to help disorganize Axis air forces at Tunis.

In addition to raking the Tunis airport, the fliers from the east reported direct hits on railway installations, freight yards and warehouses in the besieged city. They also reported damaging three Axis ships at sea and in port. Shipping was attacked by American four-motored bombers at Tripoli and Homs. Two ships were hit.

There yet was no indication how many troops Rommel had managed to concentrate at El Agheila for a final stand against the pursuing British, or, indeed, whether the Nazi marshal intended to offer battle there.

(In Washington Secretary of War Stimson said the remnants of the Africa Corps were expected to make a "determined stand" at El Agheila.

(He estimated the number of Axis troops in Tunisia at between 12,000 and 15,000, saying that they occupied strong positions and that a stiff fight might be expected before they were driven into the sea.

(In the course of his press conference, the war secretary also said the Nazis still had possession of the two ports of Sfax and Gabes, far to the south of Bizerte and Tunis on the Gulf of Tunis.)

U. S. Heavy Bombers Attack Tripoli

Cairo, Nov. 27 (AP).—United States heavy bombers, ranging ahead of the British Eighth Army, made a punishing attack yesterday on Tripoli, main Axis base in Africa, and also raided Homs, 100 miles to the east, it was announced today.

Liberators making these raids scored hits which set off great explosions on two big merchant ships, one at Tripoli and the other at Homs. The latter vessel turned over on its side.

The big four-motored bombers flew through bad weather to plunge their bombs on shipping in Tripoli's Harbor and on the Spanish mole, the announcement said.

Yanks Mop Up Jap Patrols on Guadalcanal

American troops on Guadalcanal spent Thanksgiving Day "mopping up" isolated Japanese patrols, the Navy said yesterday as Secretary Knox commented that the situation in the Solomons "looks very well."

Knox said he had heard nothing of reports from Hawaii that the Japs were concentrating heavy forces at the Caroline Island bases, apparently in preparation for another offensive against Guadalcanal. He added, however, we are "going on the assumption they will come back."

At the moment, the Secretary said, interest centers on the campaign in New Guinea, where "very stiff" fighting is going on. Our progress there is slow, he added, because of the heavy jungles and strong defensive positions of the Japs who are "pinned close to the coast" at Buna.

The Navy communique said no "major ground activity" was reported taking place on Guadalcanal November 26, though our marines and troops were mopping up pocketed enemy patrols.

Two Nipponese bombers attacked the base at 4 a. m., but no damage occurred. Our own divebombers on the island maintained a patrol over the island Thursday night, apparently to guard against any reinforcements or supplies being sneaked in to the Japs.

Text of the communique, No. 203, follows:

"South Pacific: (All dates are East Longitude)

"1. On November 26:

"(a) At 4 a. m., two enemy bombers dropped bombs on United States positions on Guadalcanal Island. No damage was suffered. United States dive-bombers maintained patrol over enemy positions throughout the night of November 26-27.

"(b) United States Army and Marine Corps troops engaged in mopping up isolated enemy patrols. No major ground activity was reported.

pared with the assistance of Justice Samuel I. Rosenman of New York, presidential adviser, who has drafted a number of other governmental reorganization plans.

The President is also understood to be considering a plan to place the handling of oil under a single administrator, possibly in the War Production Board, with a status similar to that enjoyed by Rubber Director William M. Jeffers.

At present oil is handled in a number of Government agencies, with principal responsibility lodged with Ickes, who is also petroleum coordinator for war. All groups which have concerned themselves with the handling of oil have been demanding that authority over the fuel be placed in one person's hands.

The problem of food has been brought to the attention of the President both by the War Production Board and the Department of Agriculture, which have called for the appointment of a foo dadministrator to coordinate all aspects of the problem indicated. It was reported that the food "czar" would either be placed in the Department of Agriculture or under Economic Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes because of the relation of food to the cost of living.

Approval of an executive order on the subject is expected within two weeks.

The production problem—possibly the knottiest of all save manpower—is not before the President at present. It involves the current conflict between the military and the War Production Board for control over scheduling.

Secretary of War Stimson and War Production Chief Nelson conferred at length yesterday on the problem in an effort to work out an agreeable division of authority.

It is understood that Nelson is determined to give his vice chairman in charge of production, Charles E. Wilson, authority over scheduling now possessed by the military as part of an effort to reestablish civilian control over production.

When asked about the controversy recently the President stated that, if they failed to agree, they should be locked up in a room until they could agree. Discussions are expected to continue for the next few days, although it is believed that failure of Stimson and Nelson to agree will automatically dump the whole problem in the President's lap for a final decision.

Ex-Coach Sets Crippled Plane Down

By W. T. Yarbrough
Associated Press Staff Writer

Advance Base in the Solomons Area, Nov. 21 (Delayed).—Three days ago, Col. Laverne G. (Blondy) Saunders of Aberdeen, S. Dak., former West Point football line coach, took the controls of a burning bomber.

The pilot was dead, the co-pilot dying. A swarm of Zeros over a Japanese base on Bougainville Island in the Solomons surrounded Saunders' plane.

But today he's back on the job as usual in command of all heavy bombers on this base. His forehead is bandaged; his left hand slightly cut, and he still is feeling bruises from head to foot—"worse than after the first day of scrimmage."

By an outstanding piece of flying, Saunders saved himself and the remaining seven members of the crew, crash landing the bomber at 95 miles an hour beside a tiny island deep in enemy territory.

A Navy rescue plane picked them up the next day.

Started Out on Raid

They started out last Wednesday morning. The raid was a coordinated attack on ships in Shortland Harbor at the southern tip of Bougainville. Direct hits were scored on two large cargo ships and a total of 17 Zeros was shot down. The colonel's plane was the only one lost.

Saunders makes a practice of going out with his bombers every now and then. Once before his plane was thrown off its course by a storm and reached its base with only a few gallons of gasoline left.

When he walked into his headquarters yesterday afternoon his tent mate, Maj. John T. Malloy, who was end coach at West Point when Saunders was coaching the line, touched his broad shoulders lightly and said, "an old Irish prayer didn't hurt, did it?"

The colonel grinned back, "I am a Christian now."

The crew included Second Lieut. Nelson Levi of Mullan, Idaho, bombardier, who was wounded severely in the thigh; and the following who escaped injury; First Lieut. Donald G. O'Brien of Audubon, N. J., navigator; Technical Sergt. Lester H. Williams of Cobalt, Conn., aerial engineer; Staff Sergt. Joseph Delucia of Reading, Pa., assistant aerial engineer; Staff Sergt. Samuel Moses of Donora, Pa., radio operator; Sergt. Russell L. Hultgren of Laverne, Calif., assistant radio operator, and Sergt. George W. Junget of Alva, Fla., aerial gunner.

Saunders' Story

The colonel said:

"The copilot was wounded in the right leg, and I went back to get the first-aid kit. I'd just got back with it and was standing behind the cockpit when a machine-gun bullet went through the pilot's heart. It killed him instantly. At the same time, the copilot was wounded in the stomach. The cockpit was all shot up.

"The pilot fell back. I got the copilot out and took over the controls from his seat on the right side. Both engines on the left side were out, and a wing was on fire. The only thing right on the instrumental panel was the clock. I couldn't stay in formation, so I told another plane to take the lead."

(Other pilots said Saunders' plane at that time was "flopping around" so crazily they couldn't see how he continued to fly it.)

"From the copilot's seat, I couldn't trim the tabs and handle the plane with those two dead engines on the left, so I got the pilot's body out and moved into the pilot's seat. I decided to make for some overcast and so we dived down. The left wing was red hot. The bank and turn indicator showed we were in a spin. I could tell from the air-speed indicator we weren't, but it was pretty tough business flying on "instruments" under the circumstances.

"We came out of the overcast at about 500 feet and I saw I'd have to put her down. This was about 20 minutes after the pilot and copilot had been hit. The Zeros didn't follow us that far. I told the other planes to take our position and then headed for a little island.

"We were about a mile and a half out. I brought her down dragging the tail on the water at 95 miles an hour. The wings hit and there was really a sudden stop."

The crew got out on rubber rafts and was saved next day.

African Diversion Made Possible Reds' Drive, Sinclair Says

By E. C. Daniel
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Nov. 27.—Axis armies are reeling back on all fronts, British Air Minister Sir Archibald Sinclair said today.

"The dispositions of the German high command" already are conforming to the will of the Allies, he told the Foreign Press Association.

The second front in North Africa has forced Hitler to divert a fifth of the air force he used against the Russians, and as a result:

"The heroic Russians, unflinching and indomitable in defense, now are passing to the attack and hewing their way through the massed Germans and their allied divisions."

The Air Minister said the R. A. F. and the United States air forces already had been engaging half the German and all the Italian air forces in the European and African theaters.

Heavier Bombing Hinted

"No longer is it we who ask what Hitler is going to do," he declared. "Hitler's problem now is how to parry our strokes. Twice within a month the German army has been soundly beaten. In addition the German high command has been outwitted and outmaneuvered in North Africa."

He forecast heavier bombing blows against Germany this winter and declared it was the bomber command's task to see that German forces do not get the new equipment with which Hitler hopes to recover his losses next spring.

Replying to a protest by Italian Minister of Education Bottai that British bombers were destroying monuments, Sinclair said:

"This sniveling hypocrite is wasting his time directing his belated remonstrations to us." He recalled acidly that no Italian protest was raised over the bombing of monuments and historic buildings in Warsaw, Rotterdam, Belgrade and London, but rather that the Italians sent bombers to join the destruction of London.

Lauds Fighting French

Applause rang out for two minutes when he praised the Fighting French, who have unhappily protested Allied collaboration with Admiral Jean Darlan in North Africa.

"We shall not forget the Fighting French who under Gen. De Gaulle's leadership refused to accept defeat and kept alive the flame of French resistance to Germany."

He said the air cover for the 850-ship armada for the North African operation was one of the most difficult tasks ever undertaken by the R. A. F., but,

"In one thing they were very lucky. They have got splendid comrades in the United States Army Air Corps under General Doolittle. Trust them to see the job through until General Anderson's troops clear the Germans and Italians out of Tunisia."

Solomons Sinking Survivors Landed

Philadelphia, Nov. 27 (AP).—One hundred and fifty survivors of the American destroyer Duncan, sunk off Guadalcanal October 12, were landed by the light cruiser Boise when it put into the Philadelphia Navy Yard for repairs on November 19, the Fourth Naval District announced today. Five officers and 55 men on the Duncan were lost.

The Duncan was sunk in the same action in which the Boise achieved an amazing record by sinking six Japanese warships—three cruisers and three destroyers—within 27 minutes of deadly close range firing.

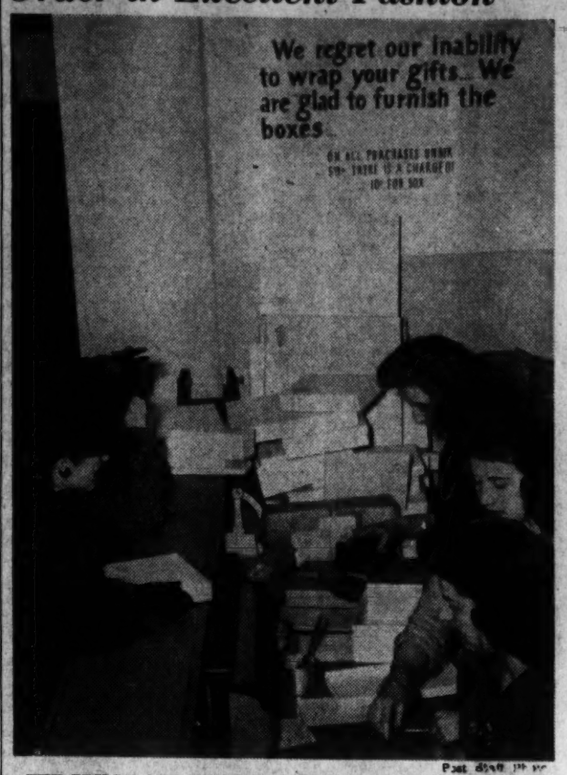
Shoppers Accept 'No-Delivery' Order in Excellent Fashion



THE FRILLS ARE GONE—Julia Mehlman (left), on a shopping tour yesterday at Hecht's, learns that no more fancy gift-wrapping is available. Boxes, however, are supplied

The words "send it out on today's delivery" have been dropped as startlingly as the familiar "gimme two pounds of coffee" and, in the parlance of a big department store executive, "no customer resistance whatsoever" has resulted.

Yesterday, three days after the OPA's authorization for the removal of retail store frills which doomed fancy wrappings, put carryable bundles into millions of arms and took the coddle generally speaking out of the customer—"not a single complaint has been heard."

The public, said the store executive, "is way out in front in cooperation." Only a memory now is the demanding woman shopper squawking across the counter, it appeared.

At Hecht's, for an example, the wrapping counter, where in calmer times a wrangle might have arisen over such critical matters as the color of the string, a large sign reads, "We regret our inability to wrap your gifts. We are glad to furnish the boxes."

So the customer, as in other stores, takes his purchase in a box, in a paper bag into the crook of his arm, and cooperatively departs.

Self-service, too, is making its appearance with the introduction of counters with goods, price-marked, to be selected by the customer without benefit of a saleslgirls' smile and taken along to the cashier.

But women carrying their packages without a frown is the element of note in the stores. They are said to be cooperating well, too, in leaving word with their neighbors to receive the heavier deliveries in cases when no one is at the purchasers' homes. This, of course, forestalls second trips by the trucks which still deliver the heavier merchandise three times a week.

The Christmas store decorations will be as elaborate as usual because such adornments, always difficult to lease and expensive, are arranged for as far ahead as April and May.

Other "frills" spoken against included the free use of telephones, which few if any stores have permitted, and free refreshments—which would appear to have ended with the free lunch on the old barroom bars.

Toll Of Prisoners

It may be of very great significance that in the fighting which has taken place west and northwest of Stalingrad since November 19 the percentage of enemy troops taken prisoner by the Russians is higher, in proportion to total casualties, than it has ever been since the struggle on the Eastern Front began 17 months ago.

Two possible explanations present themselves. The first is that the Russian success in cutting the railroads leading from the German supply bases to the narrow corridor between the Don and Volga Rivers has deprived large numbers of Axis troops of food and ammunition, leaving them no alternative but surrender. But it may also be that the morale of the German, Rumanian and Hungarian troops in the Stalingrad sector has gone into a nose-dive.

It would certainly be strange if that were not so. For three months Hitler has been extremely lavish with manpower and materiel in an effort to smash Russian resistance. Repeatedly he has told his troops that the victorious end was in sight, but, instead of being nearer to their goal, the Axis forces find themselves farther away than ever. They now find themselves in retreat, harassed both by an onward-rushing Red army and by the no less ferocious thrusts of an extremely inhospitable climate for which they are unprepared. And it is probable that they have also got wind of the disaster which has befallen the German forces in Africa.

It is still too early to assume that the morale of the German army has completely collapsed. But the indications do point to the possibility that it has begun to crack. If so, the Battle of the Corridor may turn out to be even more of a catastrophe for Hitler than the communiques suggest.

School Aid

One strong argument will be raised against Senator Elbert D. Thomas' bill before the Senate to authorize the expenditure of 300 million dollars as a start toward equalization of opportunities for education in America. It lays another burden on the Federal Treasury at a time when the deficit, due largely to the expenses of the war, is already of astronomical proportions. Congress is naturally reluctant in such circumstances to share an obligation that has heretofore been left chiefly to the States.

Nevertheless the Committee on Education and Labor, of which Senator Thomas is chairman, has brought in some powerful arguments for the bill. And it must be admitted that the war has added to the urgency of aiding the poorer States which are losing their teachers to war-production plants. Nor can we be oblivious to the appalling waste of manpower resulting from the illiteracy that we have failed to correct in the past. With the draft once more throwing into bold relief the pitiful deficiencies of our educational system, the need for some means of bolstering up its weakest segments are obvious.

An exhaustive study which the Committee on Education and Labor began in 1937 shows flagrant inequalities in the educational systems of the various States. In 1939-40 New York spent $135 per pupil for elementary and secondary schools; California spent $126; Mississippi, $24, and Arkansas, $25. There are similar wide discrepancies between the salaries of teachers, the investment in school property, and the length of the school term in the various States. In general the schools of the South make the poorest showing—largely because of the low per capita income prevailing in most of the Southern States and the large number of children to be educated. South Carolina, for example, was found to have 589 children of school age for each thousand adults, while California had 277. Under our nationalized economic structure, wealth and taxable income is often drained out of rural areas and regions producing only raw materials. But the large crop of children remains to be educated in these underprivileged areas. Equality of educational opportunities seems to be impossible under these circumstances without Federal aid.

It is this shocking disequilibrium at which the Thomas bill strikes. Funds appropriated under its terms would be allocated in accord with an "index of financial need." Under this formula "the less income the people of a State receive in relationship to the number of children, the more Federal aid that State will receive." To prevent the mere substitution of Federal funds for State funds, grants would be limited to those States which continue to spend for schools at least as much as they did in 1941. There seems to be an adequate safeguard, also, against any interference by Federal officials with school curricula, books or methods of instruction. States would be left free to accept the proffered aid or to rely upon their own resources.

In effect this bill must be regarded as an important prop beneath our democratic system; for education lies close to the heart of government by the people. Especially in this era when pressure is being exerted to break down the final barriers to full participation of the rank and file in public affairs, Congress would be short-sighted to let the present gross inequalities as to education stand. The strong case for building up our educational system at its weakest points may even outweigh the natural reluctance to add to the Government's financial burdens in wartime.

Question Of Unity

Reports of a three-way shift in Cabinet posts as a means of strengthening the Department of Labor are in line with previous indications that the President is about to bring manpower controls under a single head. It is said that Mr. Roosevelt intends to make Secretary Ickes the new manpower czar with the title of Secretary of Labor. Secretary Perkins would be shifted to the Federal Security Agency, while Chairman McNutt of the existing War Manpower Commission would succeed Mr. Ickes as Secretary of the Interior. The advantages of this plan over the present policy, which is to keep peacetime Cabinet members in office regardless of wartime demands upon them, are so obvious that many citizens will at least hope that the report is well founded.

Certainly, control over manpower ought to be centered in the Department of Labor. In recent years the policy has been, however, to shift every new function connected with labor and manpower away from Secretary Perkins' agency. Instead of facing the issue of the department's weakness, the President has created a welter of independent agencies that approach each other only through costly and complicated liaisons. To center these functions once more in the Labor Department, where they belong, would be a reform of great significance. Of course, the Selective Service System as well as the WMC and the labor functions of the War Department and the WPB would have to be included in the consolidation to make it complete.

Still, this proposed shift leaves one vital question unanswered. How would the revamped manpower agency correlate its efforts with those of the WPB and the procurement agencies of the armed forces? Manpower controls are valuable only as they fit into the general plan for mobilization of our entire national resources for war. There is as yet no indication as to how supervision over the letting of contracts, the allocation of raw materials and of skilled labor would be interlocked in one unified program.

To be sure, the new manpower czar would be a member of the Cabinet. But Donald Nelson, the war-production czar, is not—an omission, which at the time of the appointment, we noted and regretted. How, then, would integration of their programs be effected? It is all very well to say that there would be cooperation between the two agencies, but experience shows that such cooperation is seldom effective unless the two agencies are integral parts of one unifying organization.

Great Britain, of course, has a separate Minister of Production and Minister of Labor and National Service. But both are members of the Lord President's Committee and of the War Cabinet. In other words, they are arms of the same body. Similar results cannot be achieved by simply making production and manpower chieftains in this country answerable to the overworked President. Now that consolidation of manpower controls seems to be taken for granted, the major question is one of tying the prospective new agency in with a master war-policy-making agency which does not exist at present.

Salary Limit

Various members of Congress, including Senator George, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, have challenged the validity of the $25,000 limit on salaries set by executive decree. Regardless of the legality of the action taken, the salary limitation order is certain to become a very live issue in the near future. Already an abortive attempt has been made by a member of the House to attach a nullification amendment to the pending war-powers bill providing for suspension of tariffs. And Senator George believes that the $25,000 limit is bound to be challenged when the Treasury comes forward with new tax proposals. For, as Mr. George explains, the Treasury customarily decides on the reasonableness of salary payments charged off as business expenses in computing corporation income taxes. If a net salary of $25,000 after taxes is to be the allowable maximum, then the Treasury will have to make that figure the basis for future tests of reasonable salary payments before taxes.

A question also arises as to the effect of the salary limitation on tax revenue. Some top bracket corporation executives are already asking their companies to reduce their salaries to a point at which taxes will take off just enough to net them $25,000. That means, of course, that the employing corporations will get the benefit of the reduction and the Government will get less revenue, because the tax rates on company income are lower than those applicable to high-salaried employes. Again, high-salaried individuals paid according to the amount of work done, movie stars, for example, may quit work when they have earned enough to obtain a net income of $25,000. Once more the Government will be a loser, and so will the picture-loving public.

The income-tax law is a much more flexible and certainly a decidedly more equitable means of reaching large incomes than a flat limit on salaries which does not apply to coupon clippers who may continue to draw $25,000 after taxes. If the executive order could be counted upon to bring more revenue into the Treasury or to curb inflationary spending substantially, it could be justified as an emergency measure. As it is, the chief result of this unexpected reduction in salaries will be to reduce contributions for charity and other worthy causes, and to throw out of employment a good many older men and women in household service who are no longer capable of doing war work. Taxes have already become sufficiently heavy to discourage spending for pure pleasure and prevent extravagant consumption, while rationing prevents waste by rich as well as poor.

French Fleet

It is reported from Vichy that the entire French fleet of 60-odd vessels which had been lying in harbor at Toulon is at the bottom of the Mediterranean—scuttled by the French themselves. This, if true, is Admiral de la Borde's answer to Hitler's occupation of Toulon. That French base was kept free from occupation when Hitler, after the landing in West Africa, entered "Unoccupied France" in violation of the armistice agreement with France. Evidently the Fuehrer was afraid either of what has now been accomplished or of the possibility that the fleet might slip off to the anti-Axis coalition. And he maintained a strong airplane concentration posted outside Toulon further to discourage either action.

Why, then, did Hitler enter Toulon and thus risk the scuttling of the fleet? The excuse offered from Berlin that Marshal Petain had authorized an Anglo-American landing sounds specious. Yet, our relations with France have become a "riddle wrapped in an enigma inside a conundrum" and nothing seems impossible. Hitler, in other words, has as much reason to be jumpy about those relations as anybody else. His jumpiness, however, seems to have landed him into an error of the first magnitude. If the whole of the Toulon fleet is at the bottom of the sea, he has lost whatever hope he may have entertained of seducing it, and the Allies have found the path to Toulon cleared of a sizable menace. How sizable was the French concentration cannot be gauged accurately. It may well embrace 3 battleships, perhaps 10 cruisers, 28 destroyers and up to 50 submarines—a fleet, which, even if not in good condition, certainly constituted a formidable navy.

Questions had been raised about both the discipline of the crews and the honor of their commander, Admiral de la Borde. They would be dispelled by the confirmation of this wholesale scuttling. Evidently, with the fiction of Vichy exploded, the "fleet of Toulon"—including the port itself—was regarded by the sailors of France as the only part of metropolitan France that remained intact and sovereign. They were determined to maintain the French toehold, or, failing that, to sabotage it. For this reason—as well as to keep the navy in being for the postwar reckoning—Admiral de la Borde seemingly would entertain no dealings with either the Axis or the United Nations. Certainly, he would have no truck with Admiral Darlan, whom he disliked intensely. Wrong-headed we may think him for not putting his vessels at the service of the cause which will free France along with every other crushed nation, but, if things are what they seem, he and his men have shown themselves by their sacrifice to be true Frenchmen.

AGAINST A NEED

I never saw her, but I always sensed
As I made ready for preserving time—
For yield of earth, of tree and spreading bush,
The moment fragrance swirled against the pane
A little nameless ghost would then draw near,
Darting about on restless eager feet,
Making her presence tingle in the hush.

Why did she come, I wondered, why return
With every autumn of the passing years?
Blood of my blood, no doubt, for old frontiers
Shadowed the background of the kettles' steam
And gave her leave somehow to speak her mind
Unmincingly, until my casual mood
Reflected hers, insistent on a need
Past reckoning, a warning I must heed—
And now, so like my ghost from olden days,
Reverent and fearful, even as I praise
The bounty at my hand, I say her prayer—
War through the world and hunger everywhere—
"Spring may be long in coming! Take care! Take care!"

Thanksgiving Thoughts

America was discovered and built by prayers and thanksgivings. When Christopher Columbus with his party started out on his journey they kept praying to reach land and offered thanks when they landed. Ever since, prayers and thanksgivings have been practiced by all those eager to find for themselves and their future generations a spot in free America.

The prophets say that God is with those who believe in Him. That God is with our country is proved best by our present victories. Our enemies have for a good many years prepared themselves at top speed for this war, while some of our so-called patriots worked overtime to keep us from preparing ourselves properly and are still hampering our war work and trying in every possible way to discredit our military and civilian leaders and confuse all of us. Still we are victorious.

The prophets also say that who fights for right will win, but no fight can be won without sacrifice. The sacrifices we on the home front are asked to make are in reality building up a better and more secure future for ourselves and our children. By buying war savings stamps and bonds now while earning possibilities are at a peak we do not squander our earnings, but lay them away for the days when they may not be so easily obtained. The best presents we can make to one another in the coming holiday season are war savings bonds and stamps. The more we pray, work, give, save, share, encourage our boys in uniforms and our leaders, and continue to kill rumors, antagonisms and other vices forced upon us by the enemy, demand less talk and more action from each and every one of us, the sooner this blood shedding will be over.

Shades Of OPA

Living as we do in an isolated suburb of Washington, where our whole economic structure is built around the use of an automobile, and finding ourselves on the spot because we are too close in to be classed as a farmer and too far out to be able to do the necessary chores for the home on the meager gas ration allowed, we have been more than a little irritated by the lack of practical knowledge in the OPA, as evidenced by their arbitrary rulings on what constitutes necessary driving. This probably accounts for my dream of last night.

I dreamed that, due to the aforementioned gas rationing, I had been compelled to discontinue the use of my car and was trying to get home by other means. I came to a transfer point and approached the trolley car I should take, carefully holding my transfer in my hand. But when I started to give it to the "conductor-motorman," it disappeared. The motorman being of a kindly nature found another transfer and gave it to me, but when I started to board the car he stopped me and said: "Do you have a 100-ampere storage battery in your automobile?"

To which I replied, "I do not."

"Well," he said, "you can't ride this car then; those are Leon Henderson's orders."

Impractical Research

As a businessman who has seen much of Washington since the war began, I am much interested in the efforts of Senators Byrd and Vandenburg to reduce waste of manpower in the Government service. I agree wholly in their aims, but I think their methods should be more direct. I have found that some of the most important Government offices are greatly handicapped by insufficient personnel. Others, as the Senators point out, are wastefully overstaffed.

This is the time for unity and loyal support of the Army and Navy and I am one willing to overlook unavoidable errors and inefficiency incident to the main task of winning the war. But when the military departments and the new war agencies impede the war effort as many of them are now doing by overstaffing and pursuing impractical notions, it is time for statesmen to take action that will bring the offending executives back to earth.

I am in the technical instrument field. I know that some of the young officers in the War and Navy Departments have been allowed to go wild in the promotion of research and pseudo-research which any sound engineer recognizes as wholly impractical. In general, research does not flourish under the military, and under the pressure of war conditions, with new and inexperienced officers and greatly expanded organization, so-called research under military direction results in duplication, waste and very little accomplishment. Research is a civil function. Let the military tell the experienced research agencies what they need. They will produce it if possible, and do it much more quickly and better than the inexperienced young officer whose enthusiasm and vigor is much more profitably used in military operations.

Statesmen and columnists could do the country a real service if they would ferret out the agencies that are over-expanding their activities into civil fields in which they have neither competence nor authority, and place their surplus personnel in offices where they are really needed.

To Save Fuel

May I use a little of your valuable space to offer this suggestion: That the stores remain closed on Saturday, December 26, and on Saturday, January 2. This would insure two three-day periods of fuel conservation, also, two three-day rest periods for employes.

It is admitted that stores do not operate at a profit on the day following Christmas, and the same is partially true for the day following New Year's.

Should Washington set such an example it might be followed by stores East, West, South and North. The fuel thus saved would make for creature comfort in many homes; also it would provide motive power for many tanks which are rolling the Allies along the road to victory.

Board Of Trade Policy

Your editorial of Wednesday regarding action taken by a subcommittee of the Public Schools Committee of the Board of Trade on proposed nursery schools for the District is fair comment on a matter of public interest. Yet it seems to me that the editorial missed one point that should at least have been mentioned. By its failure to mention this point the editorial leaves an erroneous impression regarding the functioning of Board of Trade committees and subcommittees.

The point that you missed is that the subcommittee's report, which the editorial criticizes, also was criticized by a majority of the members of the full committee to which it was made. As a result, a motion was adopted by the full committee referring the report back to the subcommittee for further study. The subcommittee report manifestly did not reflect the sentiment either of the full committee or of the Board of Trade. This should have been made clear in your editorial.

Our Washington Board of Trade functions through committees and I am proud to say that the findings of these committees usually represents factual research and study. But before a committee report can claim approval of the Board of Trade it must receive the approval of the full committee and, later, of the board of directors. This method of full discussion in passing on questions of community interest usually finds approved reports of the Board of Trade accurately reflecting community sentiment.

The report discussed in your editorial was merely a subcommittee report, representing only the opinions of the members of the subcommittee, and therefore, not Board of Trade action or policy.

Renter's Fuel Dilemma

I am very interested in the fuel oil shortage, and especially in the threats recently published to penalize home owners who have not converted to coal by giving them no oil. I would like to suggest that this is a complete violation of justice. Unless a thing is compulsory you cannot penalize people for not doing it. The situation is especially difficult for those who rent homes. Obviously the owners of those homes do not want to spend the money to convert their heating plants unless they have to. Are their unfortunate tenants to be left in the cold, are their babies to be frozen because the Government omitted to make a decree that those owning homes for rent should convert their heating plants to coal? In view of the crowded situation in Washington, renters have no bargaining power themselves.

I suggest that before there is any penalizing done there should be a little more consideration for those who are not able to decide their own fortunes. If there were a compulsory decree it would also protect the offspring of parents who do not wish to spend money. At present they are also helpless, no matter how tender their age.

The Post Impressionist

Everybody Sing

You know how it is at a party. It's about 1:30 and the guests begin to drift out. Somebody sits down at the piano and starts ruffling the keys. Overcoats are dropped on chairs, there's a little group around the piano, and people are asking for "St. Louis Blues" and "Stardust." Everybody sings.

I've seen it happen time and again. For me it's always the high spot. Watching people trying to be gay gets me down. But watching them sing makes me feel good. Because when people sing in a group they forget about themselves. They sing because singing is fun, not to impress anyone with the beauty of their voices or their ability to recall words.

It's because they like the songs and the feeling of sharing them with others. If you've noticed, the songs that go over best are a little sad and with a note of longing—"Begin the Beguine," "Night and Day," "Summertime," "Stormy Weather." It's a good tip for a songwriter who wants to be remembered.

Many of the old-timers have the same quality—"Jeanie With the Light Brown Hair," "Loch Lomond," "Coming Through the Rye." Sometimes you can go on for hours without a break. But sooner or later ideas begin to run out. The pianist has to fumble for unfamiliar tunes. Somebody notes the time and the session is over. It's a great way to wind up a party.

My sister and I have a repertoire of our own. It contains some choice bits like this round done to the tune of "Three Blind Mice":

Scarlet fever, scarlet fever
Then the mumps, then the mumps
Spinal meningitis, spinal meningitis
Now she's dead. Now she's dead.

Living in different cities, we don't get together very often, but when we do, we don't waste words, we sing 'em.

Our most recent songfest was at a summer camp. It was one of those cold rainy Sundays when the playing cards come out of suitcases and people keep going to the canteen for hot coffee. Down in the social hall people are getting the last ounce of satisfaction from a basketball. It's group games. And off to one corner on the stage my sister and I get ourselves a piano—and give.

It always starts with some of her new compositions. They're good—but who buys Elizabethan ballads? Then we get warmed up on a little Gilbert and Sullivan, some of the better known Rodgers and Hart songs like "Where or When." We're not trying to gather a crowd, but when we look, there it is, and hungry for more.

So we bring out some of the more zany numbers.

A mother was chasing her son around the room
Was chasing her son around the room
And while she was chasing her son around the room

Stanza 2—Repeat.
Stanza 3—Likewise.

Seeing it in cold print you'd be surprised how funny it is to a crowd. We did twelve stanzas amid general hilarity, introducing each one as if that one were really going to be different.

Then there were "In the Hills of West Virginny" and "Zuleika was Fai—rrr to See-hee-hee." The next gives everyone a chance to be a songwriter.

Darlin' you can't love one
Darlin' you can't love one
You can't love one, da da dah dun
(you supply the line)
Darlin' you can't love one.

You do it with the numbers through 10 and depending on how inventive the group is you can go on several rounds.

The piece de resistance (and we always try to wind up with it) is "The Moon of Manikoora" done our special way. You get a couple of people to carry the tune. And you get someone to say: Boom-boom, boom-boom, boom-boom for background. Another says: Swish (pause). Swish (pause). You let them sing a couple of lines this way, raise your hands to your mouth, and let out a horrible blood-curdling yell . . . It's wonderful.

My friends and I sing at the drop of a hat. Eight of us were trolleying home from Glen Echo last summer when somebody dropped a hat. We started off with "She's Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage."

Then we did "Clementine."

We had the back seats and the car as usual was jammed full. By the time we launched on "Down By the Old Mill Stream" (not the river but the stream) the back third of the car was with us. "A Bicycle Built for Two" brought in another third of the car, and we had the whole car with us including the motorman on "The Flying Young Man on the Flying Trapeze." We sang all the way in to Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania where the crowd changed. If I hadn't seen "It Happen One Night" I wouldn't have believed it.

Christmas Rush Idea

May I offer the suggestion that it be made possible for low-paid Government employes here in Washington, not receiving overtime compensation, to make ends meet financially by working in the local postoffices four or five hours each evening during the Christmas rush. The student group usually employed in this work can this year easily find jobs in retail stores or elsewhere. A great majority of single Federal workers are not being permitted to go home for the holidays this year, and those with families here to feed and clothe, in this most expensive city in America, must have help of some kind if they are to pull through.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Risks Of Success

WE MUST learn from the mistakes of our enemies, and one of the things we have to learn without losing any time over it is not to be caught unprepared and surprised by our own successes. This is what happened to Hitler when France collapsed in June, 1940. At that moment he could have won the war if his army had been prepared to exploit the military situation and if he had had the statesmanship to capitalize his victory.

LIPPMANN

But he was not ready. His generals were as much surprised as the rest of us by the sudden ending of the Battle of France, and they had neither the plans nor the right equipment to seize the opportunity which was theirs to finish off Britain. Hitler was equally unready and unable to take advantage of the fact that the prostrate people of Europe would at the zenith of German military prestige have been willing to give the so-called new order a trial if the Nazi conquerors had had any plan for making life tolerable.

THE LESSON for us is that though we must continue to prepare for a long war, we must be no less prepared to take swift advantage of the opportunity, if it suddenly presents itself, to bring the war to an early conclusion. My own impression is that our military leaders have been attending to that possibility, and that some of their actions which have caused controversy or bewilderment — for example, the size of the Army and the time-table of the inductions into it—are inspired by the soldierly determination not to be caught unprepared to follow up sudden and apparently unexpected success.

Thus, for example, it has often been argued that General Marshall is organizing a larger army than our shipping can now transport. But what if a sudden strategic success—as in North Africa and perhaps elsewhere—should suddenly revolutionize the shipping situation in our favor? Then we shall be everlastingly grateful to General Marshall for having had the foresight to be ready to seize the advantage and make one success the foundation of another.

WE ARE less well prepared politically to make the most of the opportunities which may be ours much sooner than we had expected. There is a profound reason for this unpreparedness. It is that since the armistice of 1918 in most of Continental Europe the underlying condition has been one of incipient civil war. This internal struggle within most of the nations has dominated the events of these 25 years, and without an understanding of this truth the recent history of Europe is unintelligible, and the future for which we must form our policy will be quite obscure.

Thus we cannot understand first Mussolini and then Hitler unless we remember that they were the agitators and organizers of a civil war within their own countries in which by violence, intrigue and corruption they seized power and then crushed their opponents. Nor can we understand the Nazi scheme of conquest unless we remember that the path to its victories was opened up to the excellent German army by exploiting the incipient civil war in France and in most, though not all, of its smaller victims.

THE REASON we must fix this in our minds now is that as we liberate occupied territory we shall uncover this unresolved European tendency to civil war. We shall find that though the overwhelming mass of all the peoples have been united by their hatred of the Hitlerian tyranny, as soon as this tyranny disappears, yes even as the end of it comes in sight, the civil struggle which has never been settled will be resumed. Indeed we must be prepared for the fact that it will have been greatly intensified and envenomed by the struggle for food and sheer survival under Hitler's occupation, and by the nervous agony which his satanic propaganda has exploited, and by the mortal feuds and vendettas which have arisen between those who resisted the enemy and those who collaborated with him.

On the little French islands of St. Pierre et Miquelon in the Gulf of St. Lawrence there are, for example, about 900 French families who live, almost entirely, by fishing. Twenty-five of these families followed Marshal Petain. The rest followed General de Gaulle. Of the 25 families six have had to be moved by the Fighting French authorities and placed in protective custody to save them from their fellow citizens. There in miniature, 3000 miles from continental Europe, we have a preview of what will be uncovered when Hitler and his satellites and his quislings fall.

I AM NOT speaking of Germany, which must be considered as a case apart, but of many—though not necessarily all—of the liberated peoples and of the foremost among them, France. It will require the utmost wisdom and unity of purpose among the British, the Russians, and ourselves to find the way by which France and some of the others can pass from military liberation to an ordered freedom without passing through the bloody horror of civil war.

We shall not find that way by adopting the amiable fiction that the liberated nations will settle down calmly to debate and vote on how they are to be governed and by whom. We try to believe that, and officially we proclaim that, because the reality presents such tough and disagreeable choices that we prefer to indulge in political escapism. But in thinking and preparing our policy we must not use fictions to escape from the facts. If we do, we shall be the disappointed sentimentalists who turn into angry cynics. The fact is that we face the tremendous risk that liberation will be followed by civil war unless we are prepared to choose correctly and swiftly, as territories are liberated, the authority which the great powers will back to restore order and to negotiate the peace. The price of not choosing swiftly, and of not choosing correctly, those who embody the vital purposes of the emancipated peoples, will be the anarchy of civil war.

IN MAKING these choices we must not imagine that we can begin with national unity—that there is any conceivable way of making the transition by unanimous consent or even by majority vote. A policy which rests on this hope is begging the real question. For these stricken and divided countries national unity is something that will have to be achieved by immense labor, not something we can take for granted and build upon.

What we have to build upon are those elements in each country who have proved by their actions that they have the character and the strength to remain true to their country's institutions and to its engagements, and have cared more for honor, and loyalty and freedom than for their lives and their fortunes. Some of them have been outside and have stood fast and have fought. Most of them have been inside and have stood fast and, with the means available, have fought. Whether they are the majority by a count of noses does not matter in the immediate state of affairs. They are the men who alone have the vitality to ride the storm and master the disorder and to shape the future. Around them alone can effective majorities be formed and their nations rallied at last for the common good.

The Gallup Poll

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 27.—As the manpower shortage moves swiftly to the emergency stage, it becomes increasingly apparent that the new Congress, when it convenes in January, will give the question early attention.

And the problem it will face is a far from simple one. On the one hand are industries' increasing demands for more workers and the Truman Senate Committee recommending upward revision of the basic work week as a means of alleviating the shortage.

On the other hand are the workers connected with war industries, who, according to a recent Institute study are willing to work at least 48 hours a week, but, a majority say they should be paid time and one-half for all hours over 40 in any one week.

In order to measure the extent to which the public is willing to go in its resolve to bend every effort to win the war, the Institute put the following question to a cross-section of the population from coast to coast.

"Would you favor or oppose a law requiring workers connected with war industries to work at least 48 hours a week?"

The results:

Yes	78%
No	12
No opinion	10

While the public leaves the solution of the problem up to Congress, the results of the study indicate there will be considerable public pressure upon the new Congress for some program to alleviate the increasingly critical manpower shortage.

Public sentiment on the passage of legislation by Congress to require 48 hours of work in war industries, while merely a yardstick, should come as no great surprise, for the public has all along shown itself in favor of a longer work week, with time and one-half pay for overtime to begin after 48 hours.

And a study reported by the Institute yesterday revealed the public reiterating its position on the question of overtime pay.

As in former studies, the median average figure the public named at which overtime pay should begin was 48 hours. The same median figure was named by employed persons, industrial workers not connected with war industries, and a majority of people of all income levels.

WPB Accused Of Catering To Big Steel

By the Associated Press

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming told a special Senate defense investigating committee yesterday that "the voice of Big Steel seems more powerful with the War Production Board than that of Congress."

O'Mahoney made his statement during testimony by Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes who complained that delay in getting WPB priorities on steel was holding up plans for a new 20-inch pipeline to deliver oil to the East Coast.

O'Mahoney broke in to say that through efforts of the Public Lands Committee Congress approved an expenditure of $800,000 to promote increased production of iron in Wyoming, Missouri and other States over the "hard and monopolistic opposition" of Big Steel.

Construction was started on a United States Bureau of Mines pilot plant in Wyoming to explore processes for reduction of the ores, O'Mahoney asserted, and although steel officials denounced the process as "utterly fantastic" the Republic Steel company sought a $400,000 loan later to set up a somewhat similar sponge iron plant at Youngstown, Ohio.

O'Mahoney said Republic's application was approved October 15, but that on October 20, WPB issued a general stop construction order which halted work on the Bureau of Mines plant.

Ickes' protest against the order, the Senator declared, was under study.

"In other words," Senator Brewster (Republican) of Maine remarked of WPB's action, "the money changers haven't yet been driven out of the temple."

Manpower Doctor Foresees Enough Physicians for U. S.

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—Dr. Willard C. Rappleye, medical adviser to the War Manpower Commission, expressed belief yesterday that the combined efforts of America's medical schools and the Government would provide adequate numbers of physicians for both military and civilian fronts.

"At Washington," he said in a statement released by the United Hospital Campaign Committee, "we are thinking and planning in terms of the over-all need of the Nation. The situation . . . while difficult at present in some areas, is not quite so grave as many suppose or have been led to believe.

"You may be sure that everything is being done, or soon will be done, to remedy the shortages of civilian doctors nad nurses while still providing adequate medical personnel for our armed forces."

Dr. Rappleye, dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University, said that the country's medical schools had increased their yearly output of doctors by more than 30 per cent.

Ecuador's President

By Virginia Prewett

Supports Inter-American Cooperation

ON THE Latin American scene the personality of President Carlos Alberto Arroyo del Rio, currently this Nation's guest, stands out as representative of a new school of political thought that has been developing throughout this area during the past 10 years. President Arroyo is first, notably pro - Ecuadorian and secondly, a sincere supporter of the system of cooperation that the American republics are building.

PREWETT

The apparent paradox of the statement that he is pro-Ecuadorian is explained by his country's history. Ecuador traditionally has a politico-economic system that is colonial to a high degree. Her people are about 35 per cent Indian, 40 per cent Indian-Spanish and about 25 per cent European blood, mostly Spanish. Since colonial days, the transplanted Spanish have owned and run Ecuador and until very recently they have done it as nearly by remote control as possible.

As a result of Ecuador's owner-class spending as much time as they could in Europe, particularly in France, the country has suffered a compounded neglect. Her absentee owners not only rarely visited the cacao and coffee estates from which their income came, they were also absent from and ignorant of the country. In the past 10 years, many have been forced home by falling incomes and the war, and improvements in cities have followed. But even today, a visitor in Quito, Ecuador's beautiful colonial capital, will find circles still trying to recreate a French-drawing-room type of society that is gone forever.

Tackles Problem at Root

President Arroyo del Rio comes of the directing class, but he was educated in Ecuador and has practiced law there, taught sociology and law in the University of Guayaquill, served in the congress and in diplomatic posts. He looks to Ecuador and the New World for Ecuador's future. His administration more than any other is trying to tackle Ecuador's problems at the root.

These problems are not simple. The country is partly luxuriant tropical plain, where disease and jungle make life difficult for man and partly high wild mountains divided by deep valleys called in Spanish hoyos, which means holes. The country's national income is very low. Communications, disease prevention, education and even a better food supply are badly needed for her people.

Ecuador's present president has combined cooperation in hemisphere defense with an attack on these problems.

In the face of considerable opposition, some of it inspired by Axis propagandists, some of it originating among hotheads with a misguided sense of nationalism, his administration accepted the arbitration of the Peruvian - Ecuadorian question through the Rio conference. This released Ecuador, Peru and the whole west coast from the dangers that internal division brought to the hemisphere when it was under attack from the outside.

One of his first acts as president was to replace Italian military missions with United States air and naval missions. Ecuador is near the canal and has an important international cable station, a major harbor and valuable oil fields and refineries to protect. Pilots trained by United States instructors provide air patrol and defense for these military objectives.

More important still has been the Arroyo del Rio administration's cooperation in letting the United States build bases on the Santa Elena peninsula and on the Galapagos Islands.

The Galapagos, which straddle the equator about 800 miles out from the canal, are a bottom peg in Pacific canal defenses, and protect shipping lanes to Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile and even to Argentina via the Straits of Magellan.

As President Roosevelt underlined in his statement on the Good Neighbor Policy Tuesday and as this writer has discussed from week to week here, the American republics have set up a very close economic and financial structure for the stability and protection of all 21. Within this system, which has been worked out through the Inter-American conferences, Latin-American nations can ask us for technical advice and financing that are beyond their own resources. Much of the financing is done through loans that are to be repaid.

Since President Arroyo del Rio took office, Ecuador has become the scene of an important cooperative experiment. Through various United States Government agencies, programs to stimulate the production of war supplies that we need have been got underway. Roads are being improved so that these products can be shipped to harbors. A health and sanitation program, part of a general program being administered through the Office of Inter-American Affairs, has been underway since spring.

These improvements will help the country to meet an economic crisis that threatened as a result of war and will affect the production of war supplies, balsa, abaca, rubber. When the writer was in Ecuador this spring, a United States agricultural mission was there by invitation to study how production of these supplies and of food for Ecuadorian consumption could be increased.

These activities, keying war necessities of both the United States and Ecuador, also key our interests for the future peace. We can only sell to Ecuador after the war if that country has sources of income and products that we need to buy. The exchange may never be large, but the sums being spent to prepare the way for it are not large and will be far outweighed by the contribution that a more stable Ecuador will make to the stability of the hemisphere as a whole.

'Red,' Fortress Pilot, Brings Back Another Riddled Plane

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 27.—His Flying Fortresses may be crippled by flak and his crews wounded, but "Red" brings them back alive and kicking. It is getting to be his specialty.

Twice in the last three weeks "Red"—Lieut. Charles Cliburn, 21, of Hazelhurst, Miss.—has piloted a badly riddled fortress back to its base against seemingly impossible odds after an attack on German military objectives in France.

His most recent exploit occurred last Monday, when he brought a plane-load of wounded companions home from an assault on the U-boat base of St. Nazaire. "Red's" own left foot was useless, hit by a German slug.

"It wasn't much," he protested. "There weren't any control rudders for me to use my left foot on, anyway."

After dropping its deadly eggs on St. Nazaire, Cliburn's bomber was on its way home through flak-filled skies when it suddenly was attacked from every side by Focke-Wulf 190's.

Cannon shells ripped holes in the Fortress' wings and fuselage. The control lever was shot away and Cliburn could not keep the plane in formation. The co-pilot was wounded and the tail gunner's oxygen mask was shot away, but he continued firing. The bomber's compass and radio were put out of commission and their operator wounded.

When the elevator controls were damaged, Cliburn held his knee against them and finally got the ship trimmed to level flight, at least. A hit on a hydraulic line splashed oil through one gunner's turret, blinding him temporarily. A propeller was struck, and then "Red" felt a stinging sensation in his left foot. It was caused by enemy lead.

Waist Gunners Sergt. Herbert Harvey of Parlier, Calif., and Sergt. Hyman Levy of Brooklyn kept firing, and so did Turret Gunner Sergt. Raymond Moore of Corbett, Oreg. Smoke spurted from one Focke-Wulf, and suddenly the remainder of the attackers withdrew.

Cliburn headed toward the water and managed to level off. The tail wheel would not go down and visibility was almost zero when "Red" finally spotted his field. He picked out a stretch of soft dirt.

"I made a couple of passes but couldn't get lined up," he said. "Then I saw a light at the end of the runway, set her down and pulled on the emergency brake. That's all there was to it."

Group Meets Today

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Private Purkey

Dear Ma:

The first question you ask in every letter is do I get the right food. Well, ma, this is a letter to give you the lowdown. I am getting combat rations and if I never believed in majic before I believe it all now. This combat food comes mostly in powders. You just add water and get a swell square meal. No fooling, mom, I just shook a powder out of my pocket, poured water on them and right before my eyes it turned into a dollar dinner.

You got to be in a army to know what science has done for the chow problem. It is called dehydrashun. It seams a way has been found to take a New England boiled dinner, run it through a ringer and get it all out in flakes or powder, stuff it into something no bigger than a cigarette box and ship it into any climate. Then when a jeep adds water—presto—it is a boiled dinner again.

We fine something new every meal. Today I seen a BAR OF ONIONS. I ain't kidding, ma. It looked like a small cake of soap. They turned on the faucet and it turned into seven pounds of fresh onions. The other day I got what looked like a fistful of sawdust and when I wet it it became a swell dish of cereal with sugar and cream. Wonders will never seaze I gess mom.

We get powdered apricots, powdered apples, powdered turnips, and even powdered baked beans, which is the latest. I would of bet the mess sergeant he could never make nothing from powdered baked beans but they was as good as any beans I ever tasted when soaked and het. I wood not be surprised to get a postcard from the Army quartermasters department any day now with instruckshuns just to hold it under a faucet two minutes and it wood become a order of hamburger steak with french fried potatoes, green peas, carrots and French pastry with coffee.

I bet before this war is over some Einstein of the army will find a way to mail a square meal to a soldier in a ordinary small size envelope.

The thing that makes me espeshully happy is a rumor that they are working on a powdered potato. Imagine it, mom, no peeling! Just take potato dust, add water and serve.

I tell you, mom, that after this war is over you will find the whole food problem has been revolushinized even for civilyuns. This dehyradshun idea has been so perfeckted that you will be going to a drug store for your groceries. You will be able to take home a week's food supplies in the palm of your hand.

And you will like it as this dehydrated grub is stricktly okay and no garbage. The way it is put up is wonderfull. It has to be packed so it can stand any climate and no insects can get into it, not even sergeants.

Well, I guess this will make you feel better about how I am doing when I put the old feedbag on, mom, and I must close now as I have got to storm a couple of places I can't even pronounce. Love to pop and tell him not to lie about his tires.

All my love,
Oscar.

Well, the opera season opened in Gotham the other night and revealed beyond all doubt that thousands of New Yorkers have put up their silk hats, including the spare, for the duration.

Opera Notes

Among the notables present was Mrs. Elmer Twitchell, who wore a diamond tiara, an ersatz girdle and a pair of Army shoes.

Miss Ima Dodo, well-known debutante of the 1923 season, showed up early and easily took honors for the rarest costume. She wore a coffee sack and carried a percolator with emeralds.

The Nazis At Toulon

By Barnet Nover

Hitler, Petain And The French Fleet

BY OCCUPYING Toulon, Hitler made it clear that he has no further use for Marshal Petain, even as a puppet, and what is left of the Vichy regime, even as a pretense.

NOVER

On November 11, when German troops crossed the line of demarcation between occupied and unoccupied France, in flat violation of the 1940 armistice, Toulon was allowed to remain outside Nazis control.

This, Hitler wanted Marshal Petain to believe, was an act of high-minded generosity on Germany's part, proof that the Third Reich did not want to infringe on French sovereignty any more than was absolutely necessary to defend France against an Allied invasion and had no designs herself on the French fleet and the French empire.

THE RUSE worked.

It is doubtful if Petain was convinced by Hitler's protestations of innocence. The fact nonetheless remains that despite the occupation of the so-called "free zone," no order was given by Petain to the French fleet to join the Allies.

Nor did Petain order the French troops in Africa to desist from further opposition to the Allies and, instead, join with them in the fight against the Axis. On the contrary, he went on the radio and, whether under duress or of his own free will, ordered resistance to the British and Americans in Africa to continue.

AFTER HER DEFEAT in 1940 France still had two great assets. One was her empire, the other her fleet.

Thrown into the scales against the Axis at any time during the past two years and the history of the war would have been altogether different. And what, after all, were the empire and the fleet good for if they could not be used, at the proper moment, to help bring about France's liberation?

But Petain was never willing to spend the assets which France continued to have even in her defeat. His attitude was that of a miser who would rather die of starvation than deplete the hoard of gold he had saved up for his old age. Possession, so far as Petain's attitude toward the fleet and empire was concerned, was more important than use.

HITLER was clever enough to understand the marshal's state of mind and play up to it as long as any Nazi purpose was to be served thereby.

On November 11 he was not yet prepared to attempt the seizure of the French fleet himself. So he was quite willing to let Vichy hold on to it so as not altogether to destroy the fiction of Vichy's sovereignty and the pitiful illusions to which the aged marshal had for so long clung

There was even the possibility —Hitler was missing no tricks —that Petain might, in his eagerness to keep his hands on the empire, employ the fleet to "defend" it against the Allies.

FORTUNATELY there was just enough doubt in North Africa as to Petain's real attitude, so that the Nazi attempt to play Petain against Darlan, Vichy against the Allies, failed almost completely.

The final proof was the action of Governor General Boisson of Dakar who, at the suggestion of Darlan, and despite the radio appeal of Petain, announced his adherence to the Allied cause.

In the meantime, developments both in North Africa and in metropolitan France made it clear that French ferment against the Axis was steadily rising. We have proof of that in Berlin's own admission that "Anglo-Saxon influences" were spreading among French officers and the French fleet, that the "political cleft in the French army" was "endangering the safety of the German troops of occupation and undermining the authority of the French government."

The Axis occupation of Toulon and the demobilization of French military and naval forces in France was the result. The sequel to this action was the scuttling of many, perhaps all, of the 62 French warships in Toulon.

THESE WARSHIPS would have been useful to the Allies at this time.

The size of the present British and American naval force in the Mediterranean is considerable and it may now be joined by French warships which have been stationed at Dakar and elsewhere.

But we still have the largely unused and still powerful Italian fleet to cope with and we do not, therefore, possess unquestioned naval superiority in the Middle Sea. If the Axis throws the Italian fleet into the scales the Allied occupation of Tunisia may be postponed for some time.

We can comfort ourselves, however, with the thought that if the French fleet at Toulon did not fall into our hands neither did it fall into the hands of Hitler. There is further consolation in the fact that the tragi-comedy of Vichy has now come to an end.

Indeed, one can say of Vichy, what Macbeth said of Cawdor, that nothing in its life became it like the leaving of it. The resistance which was put up by French troops against Germans pressing their way into Toulon shows that the helpless and hopeless mood of defeatism that prevailed in France is gone. Though all France is now occupied, France is now back in the war.

Nelson Says Labor Can Afford to Rest On Christmas Day

There have been no full holidays in war industry this year, but Chairman Donald M. Nelson of the War Production Board believes there is one that we can afford. He said yesterday:

"'More than ever before in our lives, I suppose, we need this year to pause from our labors on Christmas Day and think deeply and humbly about the faith by which we live, in order that from the profound promise of this day we may draw the hope and the vision which we must have. On the birthday of the Prince of Peace we can and should rest from the production of the weapons of war.

"After the holiday, we must drive ahead with renewed energy . . ."

Caucuses Urged Before Assembly Of Legislators

Annapolis, Nov. 27 (AP).—Advocating that precedent be broken to save valuable time, Delegate Albert L. Sklar (Baltimore Fourth) has suggested that both political parties hold unofficial sessions before the General Assembly convenes January 6 to settle preliminaries of legislative organization.

Sklar's suggestion was made to Gov. Herbert O'Conor and chairmen of the Democratic and Republican parties.

In former years, the first days of the Assembly's session were spent in making committee appointments and organizing for business.

Sklar said that if the parties held caucuses to determine committee posts before the Legislature convened, much time would be saved.

He added this also would prevent the customary last-day jam at the end of the three-month session.

Advent Sunday Services Tomorrow Will Launch Christian Church Year

Bible Sunday To Be Observed For 20th Time

Universal Bible Sunday will be celebrated in churches throughout the world Sunday, December 13, marking the twentieth year that the American Bible Society has sponsored the observance.

DR. DARBY

Commenting yesterday on the theme of this year's observance, "Watch Your Scripture Reading," Dr. Francis C. Stifler, editorial secretary of the American Bible Society, said:

"Because our Nation was born of the devotion of our Puritan ancestors to the teachings of the Bible, Americans sometimes think the Bible as peculiarly their own. But the Bible is not an American book. It is the world's book. It so far outstrips all other books in every respect that it may rightly be called The Book. The Bible, either in part or as a whole, has been translated into 1055 languages and dialects, including all the principal languages of the world. For many years now it has consistently surpassed any other book in its sales, approximating each year 25 million copies.

The local phase of the American Bible Society's work is carried on through the Washington City Bible Society, of which Dr. W. L. Darby is president. He was for 18 years executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches.

Best Seller To Be Reviewed By Father Connell

The Rev. Francis J. Connell, C. SS. R., noted Redemptorist educator and lecturer, will give the last in the series of autumn-winter reviews of the Critics Forum—"Catholic Thought on the Best Sellers"—on December 2, at 8:30 p. m. at the Mayflower Hotel.

Father Connell will review "And Now Tomorrow" by Rachael Field. This novel is a modern love story, currently one of the best sellers. It opens up the question on the ever-important subject of love and marriage. These topics will be considered in the light of Catholic thought by Father Connell, who stands out among learned people for his sane and judicious way of meeting all questions.

Father Connell is a contributor for many Catholic periodicals, particularly the Ecclestiastical Review, the Homiletic and Pastoral Review and America, as well as the Atlantic Monthly and the Reader's Digest. He is assistant professor of moral theology at the Catholic University of America and is attached to the Redemptorist House of Studies.

The Critics Forum is directed by the Rev. John K. Cartwright, pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, assisted by the Rev. Joseph Joseph E. Gedra.

Stockton-Gould Series Near End

The series of evangelistic services conducted by Misses Amy Lee Stockton and Rita Gould for the last two weeks in Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church will conclude with Miss Stockton's last sermons tomorrow at 11 a. m. and 7:45 p. m. Dr. Edgar A. Sexsmith, pastor of the church, extends a special invitation for attendance at both services. The newly organized youth group composed of persons 18 to 23 years will meet at a supperette and fellowship hour before the evening service. The pastor is formulating plans for the celebration of the 110th anniversary of the church organization to follow shortly after the evangelistic meetings are over.

Minister to Give Talk Tomorrow on 'Hate'

"Hate Never Built Anything" will be the topic on which the Rev. H. Gordon Burroughs, minister of the Church of Two Worlds, will speak tomorrow evening at the Hotel Continental. On Wednesday evening a message service will follow the lecture by the minister.

The annual Christmas bazaar will be held on Friday in the ballroom of the hotel from 10 a. m. to 8 p. m.

For Idealists

Douglas To Deliver 3 Lectures

Lloyd C. Douglas, author of best sellers and movie successes, such as "Magnificent Obsession," "Green Light," and "The Robe," will lecture December 1, 2 and 3 in First Congregational Church on the general theme, "For Impatient Idealists." Separate lecture topics are: December 1, "Eloquent Bones;" December 2, "Abandoned Towers;" December 3, "The King's Highway."

DR. DOUGLAS

Dr. Douglas began his professional career as a Lutheran pastor and one time served Luther Place Church of this city. Later he entered the Congregational ministry, but on the success of "Magnificent Obsession" left the pulpit for the wider audience.

Tomorrow at 11 o'clock Dr. Howard Stone Anderson will preach on "Every Man Has His Price!" Music will be by Mr. Noel Burns, tenor, and by the a cappella choir singing "Lamb of God" and "He Is Blessed."

In the evening the Rev. John E. Wallace, assistant minister, will give a dramatic book sermon on "Who Walk Alone!" by Perry Burgess. Marjorie Brett Slade, soprano, will sing "Like As a Father," by Scott. The a cappella choir will sing "Lord God, We Lift to Thee."

Texan to Address Christian Youth

Jim Rayburn of Texas, 32-year-old director of Young Life Campaign, reaching thousands of high school students for Christ, will be the speaker tonight at Almas Temple in the Christian Youth and Servicemen's Fellowship radio rally, 1315 K Street Northwest. This weekly Saturday meeting at downtown Washington where servicemen are given free suppers at 6:30 p. m. is under the direction of Glenn Wagner, president of the Washington Bible Institute. The Christian Business Girls Association is serving the men each Saturday night. Another broadcast over WOL will be released at 8:30 p.m. The public is cordially invited to come and bring servicemen and other friends. Music and testimonies will be given by men in our armed forces in the broadcast and in the other services at the temple.

Chinese Embassy Member to Talk

Dr. K. C. Wang of the Chinese Embassy will address the Current Problems Class at All Souls' Church, Unitarian, tomorrow at 10 a. m. on "Chinese War Aims." For the Comparative Religion Class at the same hour, Rabbi Harry Silverstone of Tifereth Israel Congregation will continue his discussion of "Treasures of the Talmud—Dreams." The minister, Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D.D., will preach at the 11 o'clock service on "The Man Who Walked Backwards." At 5 o'clock Lewis Atwater, organist, will be assisted in a program of modern French music by Mrs. Henry T. Parrett, soprano. Beatrice Pinkney Jones, piano-diseuse, will present at 5:30 in Pierce Hall the first in a series of Nineteenth Century piano sketches, "Felix Mendelssohn, Fortunate Youth."

Worthy American Rev. Raum's Topic

The Sons and Daughters of Liberty will hear the Rev. A. F. T. Raum speak on "The Worthy American" at the First Methodist Church tomorrow at 8 p. m. at their annual Thanksgiving service.

"Church and Prayer" will be the minister's subject at 11 a. m. Ruth Oliff will direct the discussion hour for the young people at 7 p. m.

The Men's Brotherhood and Women's Society will hold a union devotional service Thursday evening with business sessions following.

Bagley Heads Young Adults At Petworth

Claiborne Bagley has been elected president of the recently-formed young adult group at Petworth Methodist Church, Grant Circle.

Also named were Sarah Inman, vice president; Jessie Phillips, worship commissioner; Margaret Kugler, recreation commissioner; Margaret Henderson, ways and means commissioner; Elaine Shreve, corresponding secretary; Margaret Walstrom, recording secretary; Pauline Reed, librarian, and Norman Sharpless, treasurer.

All young people between 24 and 35 years of age in the Petworth area are invited to meet with the group Sundays at 9:30 a. m., and also to share in the various social affairs. A Christmas party is now being planned.

Teachers of the group are Miss Margaret Lentz, Mrs. Kay Haralson and Charles Kugler.

Pictures Taken During Seances To Be Used in Talk

Pictures taken during seances of what are claimed to be the spirits of the dead, and photographs of the Winchester mystery house, reputed to have been erected under the direction of spirits, will illustrate the lecture of Evangelist Robert L. Boothby tomorrow at 7:45 in Constitution Hall.

"Can the Living Talk With the Dead? Is Spiritualism of God, Man, or the Devil? Are the Spirits of the Dead Hovering Near By?" will be subjects touched on by Evangelist Boothby in his talk.

Preceding the talk Leslie Mansell and his choir will lead the audience in hymn singing. There will be special selections by a 30-voice male chorus directed by Merrill Dawson.

Church to Dedicate New Service Flag

The feature of the 11 o'clock service tomorrow morning at the Church of St. Stephen and the Incarnation, Sixteenth and Newton Streets Northwest, the Rev. Paul D. Wilbur, S.T.B., rector, will be the dedication and blessing of a new service flag bearing a star for every member of the 43 who have entered the armed service of their country from the parish. It has been designed and made by Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, national chairman of the National Defense Committee of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The service will be preceded by an early morning celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 a.m.

Calvary Men's Class

The Calvary Men's Class will hold a dinner at the Studio Club, Fairfax Hotel, Monday at 6:30 p. m. Movies will follow the dinner. Tickets may be arranged for through Stuart Vipond.

Observance Begins Spiritual Preparation for Christmas

Rev. P. J. O'Connor to Lead St. Matthew's Sermon Series

Advent Sunday—marking the beginning of the Christian Church's ecclesiastical year and launching a four-week period of spiritual preparation for Christmas—will be celebrated with special services here tomorrow. The first Sunday in Advent always falls on the Sunday closest to St. Andrew's Day, which will be observed Monday.

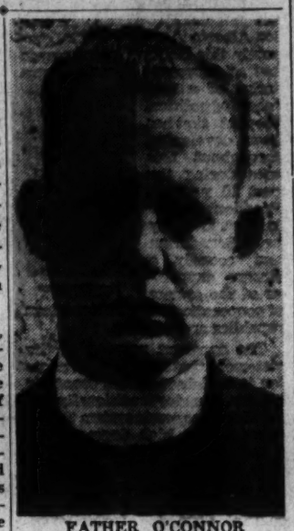
The Rev. Patrick J. O'Connor, assistant professor of sacred eloquence in the Preachers Institute of the Catholic University, will be the special preacher of a series of sermons during the season of Advent in St. Matthew's Cathedral beginning tomorrow. Father O'Connor will speak at the 11 o'clock and 12 o'clock masses each Sunday. His subject tomorrow will be "The Divine Christ." On December 6 he will preach on "The Divine Christ and the People." The topic on December 13 will be "The Divine Christ and the Churches" and on December 20 "The Divine Christ and the United States."

Father O'Connor is widely known as an orator and has been in frequent demand for pulpit work for a number of years. He has been an instructor in preaching at the university since 1936. Before his ordination he graduated from the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. He is moderator of the Shahan Debating Society at the university and director of the Basselin Foundation of Public Speaking. Just recently Father O'Connor made recordings of the Sunday gospels as revised a year ago and these records have been helpful in training young priests in properly presenting the revised gospels.

A special series of talks will also be given by Father O'Connor at the Novena in honor of the Immaculate Conception which opens in St. Stephen's Church on next Wednesday evening. Father O'Connor will preach each evening at 7:30 o'clock during the nine evenings of the Novena services.

At Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street Northwest, the Advent season will begin with Dr. Charles W. Sheerin launching a series of four special Sunday night sermons on "Four Minor Prophets Who Faced Major Issues We Still Face Today." He will preach at 11 a. m. on "Who Is Christ?"

Announcing his special topic for tomorrow at 8 p. m., on "A Message to a World at War," Dr. Sheerin said:



FATHER O'CONNOR

"I hope to show in this series tremendously deep spiritual significance behind the events in the age in which we live and how the very essential ideals for which we are fighting are those which were proclaimed by the ancient prophets of Israel hundreds of years ago. The prophets have been lost through neglect of many of our generation and the effort of this series is to reclaim them and their teaching for our war aims today."

Congregations of the United Lutheran Church in Washington and throughout the country will observe Advent Sunday as a day of repentance and prayer.

Baptists Plan Victory Week Observance

Petworth Baptists will observe Victory Week tomorrow through December 6 in celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the church and the second of the Rev. James P. Rodgers, pastor.

Dr. C. H. Bolton of Jacksonville, Fla., will bring both messages at the services, representing the Southern Baptist Convention. Prominent Baptist leaders will be present to extend greetings to the church.

The junior and church choirs, under the direction of Miss Maude Lucille Davis, will render special music, and Mr. William Raymond, tenor, will be the guest soloist for the morning worship. He will sing "The Ninety and Nine."

The main objective of the thirtieth anniversary celebration is the raising of $3,000 ($100 for each church year) on the recently acquired church annex property. Mr. James G. Yaden, chairman of the program committee for the week, announces the following special activities:

Dinner Set Thursday

The National City Christian Church will hold its first annual "Christianty on the March" dinner Thursday at 6:15 p. m. with the woman's council scheduled to serve. A program of music and a talk by Mrs. J. Warren Hastings will be presented after the dinner.

A Sunday Dinner

Soldiers To Be Guests Of Church

After a business conference, the members of the Fifth Baptist Church Training Union have come forward with a plan to entertain a group of servicemen on December 6.

An invitation will be issued through the chaplains of nearby military stations to send a designated number of servicemen to the church on Sunday morning.

Schedule for the day will include: Sunday school and church in the morning, a home-cooked dinner, afternoon entertainment selected by the host or hostess, and concluding the day with training union, evening worship, and fellowship hour which will immediately follow the evening worship.

St. Andrew's To Mark 2d Anniversary

The second anniversary of the organization of St. Andrew's Lutheran Church, Capitol Heights, Md., will be celebrated at services tomorrow, conducted by the Rev. R. Donald Clare.

Mr. Clare will speak at 11 a. m. on "Time to Get Awake," and at 8 p. m. on "Fishers of Men." Services are being held temporary at the Odd Fellows' Temple, Sixty-first Avenue and A Street.

It was two years ago the residents of St. Pleasant, Lyndon Hill, Maryland Park Hillside and Capitol Heights united to form the St. Andrew's Church, which on October 11 was received into the Maryland Synod of the United Lutheran Church of America and its present pastor installed. A fellowship gathering December 4 in the church hall will climax the anniversary fete.

'TELL ME THE OLD, OLD STORY"
ARABELLA KATHERINE HANKEY

Tell me the old, old story,
Of unseen things above,
Of Jesus and His glory,
Of Jesus and His love.
Tell me the story simply,
As to a little child,
For I am weak and weary,

Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS

This song is taken from a poem of the life of Christ and His love, written by Miss Hankey during a long convalescence. Another hymn favorite taken from the latter part of the same poem is "I Love to Tell the Story."

Two to Speak At Cathedral On Union Plan

A factual presentation of the Episcopal and Presbyterian points of view concerning unity between the two church bodies will be given tomorrow afternoon at a special "Approaches to Unity" service at 4 o'clock in Washington Cathedral which will replace the usual Sunday afternoon Evensong service.

Two speakers who have been actively engaged in working on problems that have arisen from discussions of union between the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches will present the views of their respective churches.

They are the Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary in New York, who will represent the Department of Church Cooperation and Union of the Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Dr. Howard Chandler Robbins, sometime professor of pastoral theology at General Theological Seminary in New York, who will represent the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity of the Episcopal Church. Dr. Robbins is at present special preacher at St. John's Church, Lafayette Square. Both men will speak from the Canterbury Pulpit in the cathedral.

The canon chancellor of the cathedral, the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, will preach at the 11 o'clock service of Morning Prayer.

Miss Dysinger will conduct the service at the District Training School in Laurel, Md. Miss Helen Scheidecker will be the pianist.

The Rev. Mr. Bowers, with a group from St. Stephen's Lutheran Church will visit and hold short services in the wards at the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains.

The Rainbow Class of Luther Place Church will conduct a service at the Children's Receiving Home.

Constitution Hall Hymn Sing Scheduled for Tomorrow

500 Choristers, Navy School Choir Due to Participate

Songs of the Christian Church will ring out from several thousand voices tomorrow at 4 p. m., at Constitution Hall, at a community hymn festival sponsored by the Washington Federation of Churches.

More than 500 choristers of all churches, throngs of other worshipers, and the chorus of the Navy School of Music will sing at the festival, for which a number of legislative, religious, civic and judicial leaders are sponsors.

"A service of song for an hour like this" will be the keynote of the festival, for which Dr. Fred S. Buschmyer, pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, will be reader and Theodore Schaefer, minister of music at Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, will be the organist.

The church choristers will sit with the congregation in places of best singing advantage. There will be no admission, but an offering will be taken. The St. Andrew's Society, Washington Diocese, will provide flagbearers.

Among the songs will be "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God," "The Church's One Foundation," "Faith of Our Fathers," "O Come All Ye Faithful," "He Leadeth Me, O Blessed Thought," "The Star-Spangled Banner," and others. A number of children's choirs will participate. Mrs. Ruby Smith Stahl, choir director of First Congregational Church, is chairman of the sponsors' committee.

A number of the city's leading ministers and laymen, organists, choir leaders, ministers of music, and other music lovers will take part in the festival, one of the first such church-sponsored projects ever attempted locally.

Pacific Isles Assume New Importance

IT TAKES ONLY a pencil, a paper and a little arithmetic to ascertain what no longer can be a military secret, namely, that airplane carriers probably have almost vanished from the face of the Pacific Ocean.

DREW PEARSON

Our announced losses, subtracted from the total number of carriers we had when war began, leaves us with a slim margin. Also, we know by our announcements of Jap losses that they are in the same boat.

The last naval battle north of the Solomons had all the earmarks of being fought without any carriers on either side.

If this is true, it brings out some highly important factors regarding future warfare in the Pacific. It means, first, that we have to depend on islands to serve as stationary airplane carriers; second, it may mean that we will not build airplane carriers in the future. This latter point is debatable. But there is no debating the importance of Pacific islands as air bases.

Today, the chief importance of the Solomon Islands is its airfield. That also is the chief importance of New Guinea.

But most of the island airplane carriers of the Pacific are in the hands of the enemy. Thousands of islands dot the Pacific between Hawaii and Japan, all in Jap hands. Enough airfields have been developed on them to make it almost impossible for a fleet to approach the main Japanese islands without suffering terrific damage from swarms of deadly land-based planes.

A few years ago, newspapermen covering the State Department used a gag to enable them to write a news story on Christmas and Easter. They queried the State Department regarding conflicting American-British claims to Christmas Island and Easter Island, and always got the bored response from the State Department that the United States didn't consider them worth claiming.

Today, however, the United States would give its eyeteeth for more Pacific islands. Those that we allowed Japan to take at the Versailles Peace Conference almost mean the balance of naval power in the Pacific.

Future of Flat-Tops

INSIDE FACTS regarding United States airplane carriers is that some of them have been lost while doing normal submarine patrol duty and cruising at suicidal slow speed. At slow speed a submarine can catch up with them, and submarine torpedoes have accounted for carrier deaths.

This slow speed may be necessary, because fuel oil is hard to get in the South Pacific, but it is not good naval planning. If a carrier operates at top speed no submarine can catch her.

When the Lexington was sunk she was within only 200 miles of another United States carrier, which means about 30 minutes flying distance or less. Airplane carriers should not operate that close together, and there was some inside criticism of the commanders which never leaked out.

So the future of the carrier remains to be seen, though there are so few of them left that their future may not de decided definitely in this war.

Capital Chaff

THE CHINESE complained to Wendell Willkie that no important American had visited China since the visit of Gen. U. S. Grant. When Republican former National Committeeman John Hamilton heard of this he said: "I'm going to tell that to Henry P. Fletcher. He once ran the American Legation in China." . . . When polo player Winston Guest was visiting in Argentina, his Argentine host complained that the United States didn't understand the Argentine point of view, especially in regard to meat. "Oh," said Guest, "we'll sell you all you want." . . . One all-important backstage link between the United States and General Giraud, in preparation for the North African landing, was General Odic of the French Air Corps. Residing in Washington on a colonel's salary paid by the United States Army, Odic gave invaluable advice on airports around Casablanca, kept up contacts with Giraud. . . . The anti-New Deal Republican New York Herald Tribune recently refused the following want ad: "CONSULTING EXPERT, long on Government payrolls, sickened with waste of time, money and materials, wants part-time remuneration in opposition to nonessential spending of defense funds."

Mrs. Roosevelt's Secretary

THE WOMAN WHO travels over the world with Mrs. Roosevelt has certain vigorous things to say about the female of the species. Malvina Thompson, secretary to the First Lady, says women would be more respected in the world if they would be more businesslike.

She has little admiration for the women who write to Mrs. Roosevelt by the score asking special favors, such as promotions and commissions, for their husbands.

Miss Thompson has been close to Mrs. Roosevelt for more than 10 years, but she has always kept the relation on a professional basis, never asking favors for herself or her family

The other day, she asked Mrs. Roosevelt for a few days leave to visit her mother, who is ill.

"But, Tommy!" exclaimed Mrs. Roosevelt, "I didn't know you had a mother."

Tin Can Cooperation

THE WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND salutes Milltown, N. J., for its tin-can-exchange plan.

Officials in Washington have been pulling and hauling over the tin-can-collection problem. There were wrangles over detinning facilities, and other wrangles over the best methods of collection. In New York City, cans came in so fast, the dirty mixed with the clean, that detinning plants couldn't handle them, and Mayor LaGuardia was forced to revise the campaign.

Meantime, the Borough of Milltown, population 3500, has instituted a plan of its own which makes Washington sit up and take notice. It is called the "can-for-can exchange plan." If a housewife wants to buy a can of soup, she must bring along a prepared empty can, to be surrendered in exchange. If she has no empty, she must pay 2 cents extra for the new can.

A prepared can is one which has been cleaned and flattened, with both ends and the label removed. In this form, cans can be shipped economically and detinned efficiently.

Mayor Walter Richter is getting full cooperation from the town's merchants.

NOTE: Milltown, near New Brunswick, in the center of the State, is not to be confused with Leon Henderson's home town of Millville, in south Jersey.

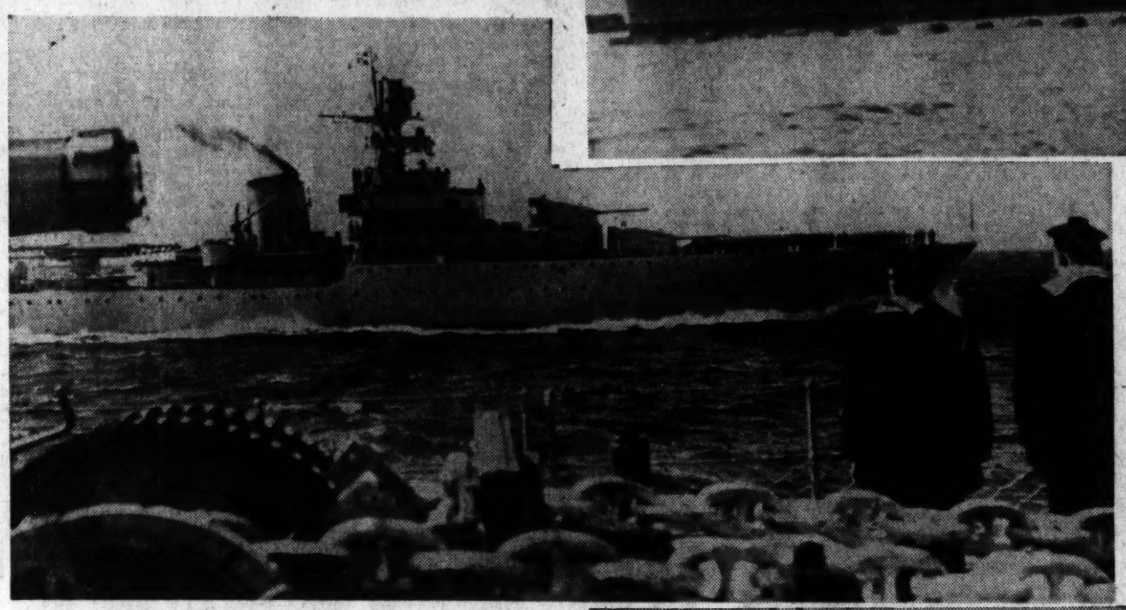
French Crews Scuttle These 3 Battleships

Map Locates Toulon; Allies Open New Drive

WAR FRONTS — French crews scuttled their warships at dawn yesterday in Toulon harbor as Germans occupied the port. The British, supported by Americans, opened a new drive against Bizerte and Tunis

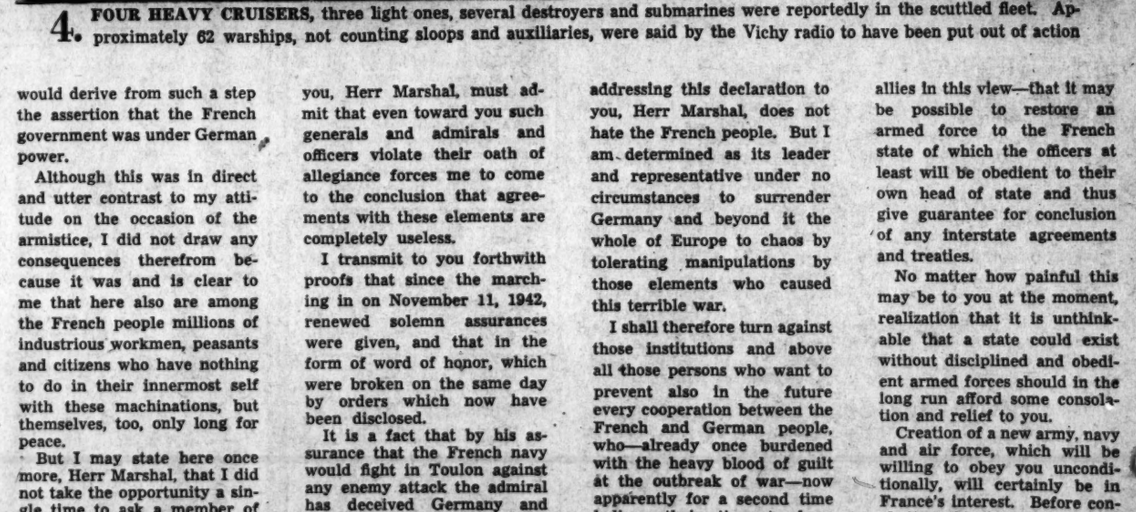
Associated Press WIREPHOTOS

1. AT DAWN yesterday as German troops moved to occupy Toulon, French sailors scuttled every warship of the mighty fleet in the port, according to a Vichy radio announcement. The 26,000-ton battleship Dunkerque reportedly was one of the ships which now rests at the bottom of the harbor



2. THE FRENCH MAN-O-WAR STRASBOURG, also of 26,000 tons displacement, shown at Toulon in a photo made during the French-German armistice period, is another of the battleships scuttled. The crew is lined up on her deck for the reception to Marshal Petain during his visit to the port in December, 1940

3. THE BATTLESHIP PROVENCE, of 22,000-tons displacement, is believed to be another of the French men-o-war scuttled at Toulon by their crews in a desperate move which removes forever from the reach of Hitler the rich prize of prostrate France



4. FOUR HEAVY CRUISERS, three light ones, several destroyers and submarines were reportedly in the scuttled fleet. Approximately 62 warships, not counting sloops and auxiliaries, were said by the Vichy radio to have been put out of action

Text of Hitler's Letter to Petain Explaining Toulon Occupation

By the Associated Press

Berlin (from German Broadcasts), Nov. 27.—Following is the text of the letter in which Adolf Hitler announced to Marshal Petain his decision to occupy Toulon:

Herr Marshal, when I was obliged on November 11, 1942, in agreement with our ally, Italy, to decide to occupy the French southern coast in order to insure the defense of the Reich against the war forced upon us at one time by France and England, I did it in the hope of introducing clarification of internal conditions in your country, which is not only in German and Italian but in French interests.

Looking back I may be permitted once more to state that it was not Germany in September, 1939, which declared war on France or Britain, but that on the contrary I have scarcely permitted an occasion to pass since taking over power to convert relations precisely between Germany and France from the strain of the Versailles dictate into truly friendly collaboration.

In so doing Germany addressed no other demand to France but the one not to reject the hand offered by Germany. It is to be regretted that unscrupulous Anglo-Saxons and primarily Jewish wirepullers succeeded in interpreting every conciliatory gesture of the New Reich as a sign of weakness and every peace offer later as proof of pending collapse.

While in the German Reich neither the government nor any other quarters, be it by speeches or through the press, address 1 to France demands let alone requests injuring French honor, French inciters in Paris demanded dismemberment of the German Reich, enslavement of the German people, removal of the foundations of our social legislation, above all, however, complete restoration of the unrestricted right of plunder by the Jewish race which had been pushed back into its proper place in Germany.

It is known to me that you yourself, Herr Marshal, were always ready to serve European cooperation. Just as they had done it in the first days of September, 1939, so also after conclusion of the Polish campaign those interested in European self-destruction and in financial exploitation of the war shouted this appeal, to reason down, demanding continuation of the war at any price.

The conflict which your government of that time had forced on the German Reich and, consequently, also on Germany's ally, Italy, thus had to be decided by arms, since common sense did not prevail.

In spite of historic and unique victory, I have done nothing that might have offended French honor, and I demanded only guarantees to make resumption of hostilities impossible under all circumstances.

Subsequently, too, no demand incompatible with French honor has been put forward. You know, marshal, that allegations circulated by British or Americans—as warmongers chiefly responsible for this war, that Germany intended to seize the French fleet, or that I intended to demand handing over of the French fleet, were complete inventions, or lies.

While the German Reich is still compelled to make sacrifices for the war imposed upon the Reich by France, the French people were able to live in peace, apart from sacrifices resulting from land, sea and air attacks by France's former allies.

At the same time, the Reich gradually released more than 700,000 of the 1,960,000 French war prisoners.

Such an attitude, I believe, is without precedent in the history of war. Gradual failure of this process is merely due to the regrettable fact that intransigent elements in your own country again and again succeeded in sabotaging genuine cooperation.

It has been your own wish, Herr Marshal, to speak to me at the time in order to find and define possibilities of such collaboration. I complied with this wish and discussions were carried on at Montoire which—as I was convinced—could have provided the basis for general lessening of the strain.

It is to be regretted that those interested in the war in France itself succeeded at the time in overthrowing this cooperation only a few weeks later, giving a motive which must be also for me personally insulting.

I am compelled to state here that the assertion was quite openly made that Napoleon's son had been brought by me to Paris for the mere purpose of inviting you, and thus to be able to get you into German hands. I must state now that you, Herr Marshal, yourself had time and again requested to be able to settle down in Versailles and that I always rejected this, pointing out that the rest of the world—and if ever so much in the wrong—would derive from such a step the assertion that the French government was under German power.

Although this was in direct and utter contrast to my attitude on the occasion of the armistice, I did not draw any consequences therefrom because it was and is clear to me that here also are among the French people millions of industrious workmen, peasants and citizens who have nothing to do in their innermost self with these machinations, but themselves, too, only long for peace.

But I may state here once more, Herr Marshal, that I did not take the opportunity a single time to ask a member of the French government to come to me, but that all talks always took place by request of the French government itself.

Also the two talks with Admiral Darlan took place only on his explicit request and on your behalf, Herr Marshal.

The landing of American and British troops in French Northwest and North Africa, which, as it now becomes evident, took place in agreement with numerous treacherous generals and officers, had removed the preliminary condition on which the whole treaty was laid down in the preamble of the armistice and compelled Germany to carry out immediately and in agreement with its allies the necessary security measures.

But not all the events which had led to this Anglo-American action here were known to me on November 11. Today I know, and you, Herr Marshal, know it too, that this occupation took place by explicit request of those French elements who had once incited to war and who even today have not yet disappeared in France from the atmosphere of public life, and above all, military life.

That French generals and admirals broke their word toward German quarters, and that innumerable times, is to be regretted in itself. But that you, Herr Marshal, must admit that even toward you such generals and admirals and officers violate their oath of allegiance forces me to come to the conclusion that agreements with these elements are completely useless.

I transmit to you forthwith proofs that since the marching in on November 11, 1942, renewed solemn assurances were given, and that in the form of word of honor, which were broken on the same day by orders which now have been disclosed.

It is a fact that by his assurance that the French navy would fight in Toulon against any enemy attack the admiral has deceived Germany and Italy again. For while he had given this statement on November 11 the order was issued on November 12 on no account to fire against possible landing of Anglo-American forces.

Numerous other violations of the armistice obligations have been disclosed to us meanwhile. I am permitted to bring the following to your notice now, Herr Marshal:

Firstly: I am aware of the fact that you, Herr Marshal, have no part in these things and are therefore the chief sufferer;

Secondly: I must safeguard the interests of the nation on which war has been forced and which for reasons of self-preservation is compelled to fight those who brought about this war and who today are continuing the war, with the aim of destroying the entire of Europe, in the service of a European, extra-European and Jewish-Anglo-Saxon clique.

Thirdly: I am compelled to continue the war on behalf of the millions of people in my own and other countries who, freed from the pressure of ruthless capitalist exploitation, are not willing to become for all time victims of international exploitation or of definite annihilation as a nation.

Fourthly: The German people, in whose name I am addressing this declaration to you, Herr Marshal, does not hate the French people. But I am determined as its leader and representative under no circumstances to surrender Germany and beyond it the whole of Europe to chaos by tolerating manipulations by those elements who caused this terrible war.

I shall therefore turn against those institutions and above all those persons who want to prevent also in the future every cooperation between the French and German people, who—already once burdened with the heavy blood of guilt at the outbreak of war—now apparently for a second time believe their time to have come for establishing in the south of Europe an invasion gateway for the breaking in of extracontinental powers.

Fifthly: After having learned of the new breaches of promise by French officers and admirals and their proved intention to open the Anglo-Jewish war criminals France as well as North Africa, I have now therefore given orders to occupy Toulon immediately, to prevent the ships from leaving or to annihilate them and to break any resistance if necessary with the utmost force.

This is no fighting against honor-loving French officers and soldiers but against those war criminals for whom even now not enough blood has flowed but who continually look for new possibilities of expanding this catastrophe.

I have therefore given orders to demobilize all those units of the French armed forces who—against orders of their own French government—were incited by officers and provoked to commit active resistance against Germany.

Sixthly: Also these measures which the disloyal attitude of your admirals and generals compelled me to take are directed, as already mentioned, not against France, nor the French soldier as such.

It is my sincere hope—and I know that I am one with my allies in this view—that it may be possible to restore an armed force to the French state of which the officers at least will be obedient to their own head of state and thus give guarantee for conclusion of any interstate agreements and treaties.

No matter how painful this may be to you at the moment, realization that it is unthinkable that a state could exist without disciplined and obedient armed forces should in the long run afford some consolation and relief to you.

Creation of a new army, navy and air force, which will be willing to obey you unconditionally, will certainly be in France's interest. Before concluding this letter, I wish to assure you once more that the step which I am forced to make is not prejudicial to cooperation with France, but is creating conditions for genuine cooperation.

In spite of Anglo-American assertions to the contrary, it is my firm determination to help France recapture the colonies stolen by the Anglo-Saxons with all means at the Reich's disposal. Neither Germany nor Italy has any intention to destroy or annihilate the French colonial empire.

It is now in the hands of French authorities to accept German measures which have become a definite necessity in such a way that there is no further bloodshed and that conditions at last are created for genuine and successful cooperation profitable to all sides.

As far as the German action is concerned, Field Marshal Rundstedt is authorized to give all orders and conclude all agreements which are necessary, and he will always be at your disposal, Herr Marshal.

I conclude this letter by expressing the hope that cooperation thus now is initiated from which we expect for France's part nothing but loyalty and understanding for the common destiny of Europe.

Accept, Herr Marshal, my expression of my personal devotion. ADOLF HITLER.

Georgia May Shift Sinkwich for Tech Battle

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Annapolis, Nov. 27.—The No. 1 reason why Army rules a 3-to-1 favorite to beat Navy tomorrow is Cadet Hank Mazur of Lowell, Mass., a 175-pound halfback who for three years has been Army's best football player.

POVICH

It will be a blow to 130,000,000 Americans tomorrow, not to mention the freedom-seeking peoples of other continents, if Mazur is hurt tomorrow. Because he's ticketed to step directly into a fighting plane after his class graduates from West point.

Mazur has been taking an aviation course at West Point in addition to his other studies, and Coach Earl Blaik gets him only for a half-hour a day between games. That's enough, because Mazur doesn't need much coaching. He's that kind of a football player. After the game with Harvard, at Boston, Mazur got in his required flying time by grabbing the controls of an Army plane and high-tailing it back to West Point, by air.

Aside from doing most of Army's passing, kicking and ground-gaining, Mazur isn't much help to the Army team, if you dismiss also his punt-catching and safety-man job. It's pretty generally conceded now that Army has one of the best backfields in the East. And the chief reason is Mazur.

Unless the pressure of business is terrific in the South Pacific, where he is in command of United States naval operations, Admiral Halsey will listen at least to snatches of the short-wave broadcast of today's Army-Navy game.

Admiral Halsey played quarterback on the Navy team that played the Army team in the year when General Stillwell of the United States Asiatic command, was in the Army backfield.

While in Washington several weeks ago before flying to his South Pacific detail, Admiral Halsey visited the Naval Academy to renew memories of his midshipman days. Beginning a tour of the grounds, he was being steered to the administration building when he asked, "Hell, where's the football team working out? That's what I want to see."

Army Halfback Bob Woods and Army End Jim Kelleher won't be in any strange surroundings tomorrow, despite the fact this will be the first Army-Navy game staged at Annapolis in 49 years. Neither of them were around in that year, of course, but both of them know Annapolis.

Only a year ago, Woods was a star in the Navy backfield. He was the particular protege of Comdr. John Whelchel, now the Navy coach, then assistant to Swede Larsen. It was at Whelchel's insistence that Woods got a chance to play on the regular Navy team. After the football season, Woods busted out scholastically at Annapolis, but gained an appointment to West Point, and Whelchel now has the task of teaching his Navy team to stop the Army back he taught how to play football.

Kelleher's is an even more romantic story. He is the son of an Army officer, who was pleased that one of his boys had entered West Point, the other Annapolis. Jim Kelleher was the lad who chose Annapolis. When tragedy struck the family and his brother at West Point died, Jim Kelleher transferred from Annapolis to West Point to please his father, and he'll be in Army's starting lineup today.

Tomorrow's game will be famous for the people who won't be there. There is no doubt now that there will be as many as 15,000 fans at the Army-Navy game, which could draw 200,000 if there were no restrictions on tickets. The presidential order limiting ticket buyers to residents of Annapolis and within a 10-mile radius is naturally a serious business with the Navy ticket office.

The gold braid that has always been seen in such profusion at Army-Navy games will be missing, but this could be the most famous of all Army-Navy games, nevertheless. The fellow who might have ventured last year that the 1942 Army-Navy game wouldn't draw a capacity crowd in a stadium seating only 22,000 would have been summarily committed to the violent ward.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

Annapolis, Nov. 27.—Here's one that nobody can answer:

If Navy was permitted to go to Philadelphia to play Penn, two weeks after Army was permitted to come down from West Point to play Penn, why aren't Army and Navy permitted to go to Philadelphia to play each other?

CONSIDINE

There were other and longer trips taken by the two service schools, but we'll skip that for the moment. Trying to dope out the reasoning behind playing the game here in semi-privacy before the reluctant citizens of Annapolis and the inmates of the city's hotel, when it could just as easily have been played in the 100,000-seat Municipal Stadium in Philadelphia is conducive to migraine.

The game could just as easily have been played in the 70,000-seat stadium in Baltimore. But no, all of a sudden there must be a big de-emphasis on a game which the country and the men who are fighting for it have loved for years.

One grave result is that it will dump the extensive sports programs of both service schools in the red, until such time as the game goes big-league again. Navy's Capt. Lymon "Pop" Perry says so and Army's Lieut. Col. Biff Jones will echo that fear. Football pays the way of dozens of sports events you never heard about at West Point and the Naval Academy. These events affect many more cadets and midshipmen, physically, than does football. There are no Government funds to pay for them, and none are likely to be allotted to take up the slack. The only thing for the schools to do will be to drop many minor, but health-giving sports.

The order moving the Army-Navy game to Annapolis supposedly came from the President himself. At least, the spokesman who gave out the news said that Mr. Big wanted it that way.

We understand that the President was much too busy with important matters to give this one any thought. As we get the story, one of the save-a-penny-spend-a-million guys buttonholed His Nibs one day, when the President was otherwise harried, suggested the change in the game, and the President, to get rid of him, said the Harvard equivalent of uh-huh. It was as simple as all that.

The removal of the game from Philadelphia, after articles had been signed for the use of the big stadium there and Philadelphia businessmen had made proper preparation, cost that city in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 in lost hotel, restaurant, saloon and taxi trade.

One of the reasons put forth for holding the game in Annapolis was that its witnesses were to be confined to the people of the village. Thompson Field, the Navy's stadium, is about the smallest that is owned by a first-class football team. It seats 22,000. It could hold the entire population of Annapolis and yet have 8,000 seats unfilled. If the same rule had applied to Philadelphia, that city of 3,000,000 or so would easily have filled the Municipal Stadium. Philadelphians complained for years that they could not get Army-Navy tickets for love nor money.

We honestly can't see what has been gained by hammering down a $400,000-gate attraction (with its multi-million sidelines) to a small show in a town that has never been accustomed to paying more than six bits to a sports event and isn't going to start paying $4.40 now. The game will draw only a little more than half the capacity of the little stadium.

The Navy people say there has been no fenagling with tickets. In line with the hush-hush of the whole affair, they went over each application with a fine-tooth comb. All applications had to be made in writing, accompanied by a money order or certified check. All had to come from Annapolis. The addresses of all applicants were checked by the Navy at the post office. Those who asked for more than two pairs of tickets were given additional grilling, to guard against scalping. Extra tickets were to be given only to the immediate members of the Annapolis applicant's family. We asked Captatin Perry what he would have done if one of the applicants put in for 20 tickets, and that genial old salt said, 'I would have spotted something there. That's more people than the customary family, outside of the Province of Quebec."

This may be the last game Navy Coach Comdr. John Whelchel will supervise, for the duration. He is eager to get a ship. In peace times, most service coaches last four years—a tour of duty. But there is no hard and fast rule about this. Since the war, Whelchel and his staff have been coaching on what amounts to a game-to-game basis.

Commander Whelchel is far from optimistic about this possible final game. "Navy is outclassed," he says, and looks like he means it.

Shift Today Of Sinkwich Is Considered

Georgia Star Due To Perform as a Tailback; Tech to Have Full Strength

By the Associated Press

Athens, Ga., Nov. 27.—Suggestions were a dime a dozen here tonight as old grads sought to give Georgia's Wally Butts the benefit of their silver hairs; but the suggestion which got most attention on the eve of this Georgia vs. Georgia Tech football game was one from Auburn, Ala.

A good reason was that Auburn rammed it down Georgia's throat at Columbus, Ga., last weekend with a fine 27-13 shellacking. The suggestion: That All-America Frankie Sinkwich might be more useful at his old job as halfback than at fullback.

Butts, who can see the light without it being a hot-foot, took earnestly to this line of reasoning, and if he can scrape up a first-string fullback—or a reasonable facsimile thereof—some 40,000 spectators will see Frankie start at tailback tomorrow in Georgia's final game.

No. 1 hope was big Dick McPhee, regular fullback, who has been out with an ailing knee. He was to have been shifted to blocking back, to round out a "dream" backfield of Sinkwich, McPhee, Charlie Trippi and Lamar Davis—but why talk of sour apples? McPhee's status still was doubtful but Butts said he would "have another look at him" before game time to see if he can play.

Tech Ready for Battle

Jim Todd, No. 2 fullback, also has a game leg, but may see limited service. If McPhee can't start, it may be Sinkwich or nothing.

Meanwhile, from Atlanta, came word that unbeaten, untied Georgia Tech would be at nearly full strength to defend its claim to the conference championship and a probable invitation to the Rose Bowl. Only Pat McHugh, regular wingback, was a doubtful starter, and he was under treatment for a broken blood vessel in one leg. Jimmy Luck, sensational sophomore punter and runner, was expected to start in his place.

Clint Castleberry, Tech's pint-o'-magic freshman was tagged for service as alternate to the Engineers' starting tailback, Bobby Sheldon.

Georgia Tech	Pos.	Georgia
Marshall	LE	Poschner
Anderson	LT	Ellenson
J. Jordan	LG	Ruark
Manning	Center	Godwin
Hardy	RG	Kuniansky
Eaves	RT	Williams
Helm	RE	V. Davis
Stein	QB	Keuper
Sheldon	LH	Sinkwich
Luck	RH	Davis
Plaster	FB	McPhee

Tech-Georgia, Washington-Washington State Settle Rose Bowl Teams; B. C. for Sugar Bowl

By Harold Claassen

Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Nov. 27.—Some of the settings may be different from previous years, but tomorrow's football games are the traditional last-of-November type with Bowl bids, sectional and intersectional titles up for decision.

Biggest change in setting surrounds the Army-Navy game, shifted to tiny Thompson Stadium at Annapolis from Philadelphia by President Roosevelt to conserve rubber, gas and working hours.

Only 12,000 spectators are expected to wander into the Navy saucer in contrast to the 102,000 which saw the middies plough to their third straight triumph at Philadelphia a year ago.

While even the Navy Academy's meager facilities will be more than enough for the annual service game it will be a different situation at Athens, Ga., and at Seattle.

Athens will be host to a bulging crowd of 40,000 for the meeting between once-beaten Georgia and all-winning Georgia Tech. The unofficial Southeastern Conference flag and top consideration for all bowl games are involved.

Georgia Tech is rumored as slated for the Rose Bowl if the Yellow Jackets triumph, but the picture would become definitely muddled if the Georgians righted themselves from last Saturday's Auburn debacle in time to ruin Tech's unbeaten record.

B. C. Headed for Sugar Bowl

Seattle's fray may determine the other half of the Rose Bowl program with Washington State needing a triumph over Washington for its sixth loop decision and at least a share of the Pacific Coast crown. A Huskie win would mean virtual elimination of both.

Boston College, voted the Nation's best collegiate eleven last week, barges into Holy Cross with a perfect season and a Sugar Bowl invitation as the prize.

The South also offers another fray on which a possible bowl bid may hinge. Tennessee takes on the up-and-down Commodores of Vanderbilt, and a decisive triumph for the Vols would probably lead to an invitation.

Other contests tomorrow has the Iowa Pre-Flight aggregation at Ohio State; Kansas State at Nebraska; Oregon State and Oklahoma A. & M. invading Michigan for games with Michigan State and Detroit, respectively; third place in the Big Ten going to the winner of the Iowa-Michigan affair; the North Carolina Pre-Flighters at Fordham, and the Philadelphia feud of Villanova vs. Temple.

Notre Dame's invasion of Southern California is expected to be witnessed by 80,000 spectators, the largest throng of the day, while Georgia Navy takes on Alabama and the California Pre-Flighters are busy with Stanford.

Dick Harlow Becomes Navy Man in Boston

By the Associated Press

Boston, Nov. 27.—Richard Cresson "Dick" Harlow, head football coach at Harvard University, today was sworn into the United States Navy with the rank of lieutenant commander.

Harlow was sworn in for deck volunteer service by Capt. C. H. Keppler, First Naval District procurement officer. This qualifies him for combat duty at sea.

Harlow, who came to Harvard from Western Maryland in 1935, also held the post of curator of oology, which is the branch of ornithology dealing with the size, shape and color of bird's eggs. As widely known among ornithologists as he was in the football world, he was custodian of birds' eggs and nests at the university's museum of comparative zoology. He is a veteran of the first World War, in which he served as a first lieutenant of Infantry.

A graduate of Penn State in 1913, where he played tackle on the football team, he coached there for nine years and developed outstanding teams. Subsequently, he coached Colgate from 1922 through 1926

Bivins Wins Over Savold In Slow Bout

New York, Nov. 27 (AP)—In a bout which crowded its meager action into the last two rounds, Jimmy Bivins, Cleveland heavyweight, celebrated his Eastern debut by taking a 10-round decision over Lee Savold, of Paterson, N. J., at Madison Square Garden tonight. Bivins weighed 175½ and Savold 195.

There were no knockdowns and the action was for the most part so slow that the drowsing customers awakened only periodically to boo and clap derisively.

Both fighters appeared to have more respect for each other's punch than for their own ability to take it, with the result the action round after round was confined to brief offensive flurries followed by hurried defensive maneuvers.

Only once did Bivins, who came East with an impressive victory string and a reputation as a stout puncher, land his famed sneak punch, a long right brought from nowhere. He came out of his corner to start the ninth with a rush and connected with his usually lethal wallop. Savold not only took it, but came back to carry the fight to the dusky, crouching, bobbing Clevelander, Savold taking the round handily.

The bout was close on the Associated Press score card. It showed five rounds for Bivins and four for Savold, with one even. The shade for each man in some of the rounds was almost infinitesimal, however.

Neither man was in serious trouble at any time, and the only blood spilled came from a slight cut over Savold's right eye in the eighth round.

'Most Valuable'

Iowa City, Iowa, Nov. 27 (INS).—Tom Farmer, senior quarterback from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, today was selected by his University of Iowa grid teammates as the team's most valuable player.

Deeds in Battle Spur Army and Navy Today

Performances of Former Service Players Will Be Uppermost in Minds of Football Warriors

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Nov. 27.—Up at the Army's Military Academy you'll find the inscription every West Pointer knows:

Upon the fields of friendly strife
Are sown the seeds
That upon other fields, on other days,
Will bear the fruits of victory.

A fellow named MacArthur wrote it—Gen. Douglas MacArthur. And it goes for all branches of the service. And that's why tomorrow's forty-third Army-Navy football game won't be only the line bucks, and the 6-2-2-1 defenses and the forward passes out there on the gridiron of Thompson Stadium here.

There will also be:

Lieut. Slade Cutter. He's on a submarine somewhere in the Pacific and doing quite a job. Remember the fellow who dropped back to kick that field goal to beat Army, 3-0, back in 1934? That was Slade Cutter.

Rear Admiral J. H. Brown. The reports say he's "on highly important duty with the fleet in the Pacific." Babe Brown scored all of Navy's 9 points in Army's 22-6 victory in 1913. The year before, he booted two field goals to trounce the Cadets, 6-0.

Maj. Thomas J. H. Trapnell. In the last word of him, he was still on Bataan. He's wearing the D. S. C. fora little job of burning a bridge that slowed down the Japs in the Philippines. Sixteen years ago, Trap Trapnell was the passing sharpshooter who helped pitch Army to a 21-21 tie with Navy before that tremendous 120,000 crowd in Soldier Field, Chicago.

Maj. Conrad F. Necrason. The

seen to it that all pasteboard purchasers are just that.

Except for officers of the two academies, the gold braid of past years, which annually put almost as much razzle-dazzle in the stands as on the gridiron, will have to "see" this one through the radio broadcast. The broadcast sponsor, incidentally, paid $100,000 for the privilege, and that money has been turned over to charity.

Although Army is a 2-to-5 betting favorite, the upsetting events down through the years since this series got under way back in 1890 leaves the "hunch" in many quarters that anything can happen. Except for a surprise win over Pennsylvania, the Middies' season hasn't been anything to pass the posies about, while Army has come up with one of its best teams in a decade under the sound teaching of Red Blaik.

Pennsylvania whipped Army, but the Cadets rolled over Princeton by 33 points and Columbia by 28, while Navy lost to Princeton and had to hit the jackpot in the last minute to hang it on Columbia.

The difference in the two offenses marks the major contrast. Fired by a fancy set of running backs, chief of whom is Triple-threat Hank Mazur, Army has a ground game that has rolled up 181 points while winning six of eight starts this year. And this strength lies not only with the varsity, for, Blaik's ball-carrying brigade is three-deep.

Navy, on the other hand, has built up its big attack around Harold Hamberg, a pint-sized pass-pitcher from Arkansas, and Gordon Studer, a lanky 170-pound runner from Wyoming. But one of Coach Billick Whelchel's headaches in his first year as Navy's head coach is that both these aces are tailbacks, and so do not play in the same backfield.

As a result, Army figures to roll home with this forty-third service scramble, thus boosting its edge in the rivalry to 23 victories, against Navy's 17 wins and 3 ties.

Service Teams Are Greeted By President

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Nov. 27.—The Army-Navy football game here tomorrow has received the following letter of "warmest greetings" from President Roosevelt:

"This year the Army-Navy football game comes as the great majority of the graduates of the two academies are engaged shoulder to shoulder in the grim game of war. On battlefields and on the seas throughout the world they are knitting still more firmly the ties of comradeship which they first formed on the playing fields of the homeland.

"Now as the academies once more meet in friendly contest our thoughts turn to those players of other years. Their efforts against the enemies of our country in almost a year of war are an inspiration to all of us.

"To the Corps of Cadets and the Regiment of Midshipmen I again send my warmest greetings. May the best team win!"

Horton Smith Enlists

St. Louis, Nov. 27 (INS).—Horton Smith's enlistment in the Army was announced in St. Louis tonight. The famed golf pro, who resides in Springfield, Mo., enlisted Monday, and reported at Jefferson barracks Wednesday.

Mild Workout Ends Army's Preparations

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Nov. 27.—Army's football forces arrived in Baltimore today for tomorrow's game with Navy at Annapolis, and held a final brief workout on wind-swept Homewood Field at the Johns Hopkins University.

In a late switch in "strategy," Head Coach Earl (Red) Blaik decided to quarter his squad in a midtown hotel tonight, instead of at Fort George G. Meade, where the Naval Academy had announced the Cadets would stay.

The Army practice was hardly more than a mild warm-up. The gridders wore only their regulation sweat suits instead of football uniforms as they ran through signal drill and "worked the kinks out."

Coach Blaik still refused to agree with most observers that Navy represented a "pushover" for the powerful Army ground game.

"No team has done much against the Navy line this year," he pointed out, "and even Georgia Tech, scoring three touchdowns, had to do it through the air, with two passes and an interception. Navy weaklings? That's silly."

Piccadilly Drives to Victory in Feature Race at Bowie Track

Hornbeam, Favorite, Beaten Out

Victor Stages Strong Finish Under Gilbert; Good Lawyer Is 3d In Oxon Hill Purse

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Bowie, Md., Nov. 27.—Piccadilly, owned by Mrs. Donald Woodward of Washington, D. C., staged a remarkable finish here this afternoon to win the Oxon Hill Purse, featuring the Friday program. Staging a broken field run that resembled Dick Todd on the loose, the son of Charing Cross and Valiantly came from last position to be first all in the final eighth of a mile in the six-furlong test. Jockey Lloyd Knapp engineered the move and sent Piccadilly between horses and then in to the rail and along in time to take the nose verdict in as wild a dash as ever seen on any race track.

Favorite Is Second

C. T. Chenery's Hornbeam, the heavily played favorite in charge of Jockey Johnny Gilbert, was the victim of Piccadilly's closing bid and opinion was divided between those who believed Gilbert went asleep and those who believed Hornbeam, carrying 122 pounds, was dog tired. However, it is doubtful if Gilbert knew Piccadilly was coming until it was too late.

Hornbeam finished a length and a half in front of G. R. Watkins' Good Lawyer in the three-quarters test. The winner was clocked in 1:15 over a slow track and paid his scattered backers a $24.30 mutuel.

Hornbeam had some tough opposition during the early stages of the sprint. Sollure and Good Lawyer forced the pace of the son of Whiskaway. Hornbeam finally shook off this pair and, with Gilbert settling down to a smooth hand ride, appeared a "sure thing" and then up jumped the devil in the image of the flying, charging Piccadilly.

The Thane Scores

With the favorite, Blue Gino, apparently sore as a boil both going to the post and during the first half of the seventh race, H. O. Collins' The Thane proved a surprise winner of the mile-and-a-sixteenth test. The colt came home three parts of a length in advance of Harry Neusteter's One Link with H. G. Bedwell's Ginoca third. All of the money horses were long shots. The Thane paid $50.60.

A small army of fans collected the daily double which paid a mere $18.70. J. L. Taussig's Budgeteer was a length and a half winner in the first race under a good ride by Jockey M. Calvert. Mrs. J. B. Bond's Most Alert won the second event in a driving finish.

Racing Form Wins Motion To Circulate

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 27.—The Triangle Publications, Inc., publishers of the daily racing form and other publications, won a Supreme Court motion today restraining City License Commissioner Paul Moss from interfering with distribution of its horse race information sheets.

In granting the motion, Justice Isidore Wasservogel urged an early trial of the issues involved and indicated he would rule similarly in the cases of Armstrong publications, and Ken Kling, publisher of a comic strip dealing with racing information.

The city seeks to bar these publications from newstands also.

The court held that it was not justified from the papers submitted to agree with allegations of the corporation counsel that the publications acted as "accomplices of the criminal gambling element."

Publications distributed on newsstands must be licensed by the city.

Original Angel Gets Big Test In Dusek Scrap

The original Angel, that guy with the freakish puss and body, will be facing Rudy Dusek, the old master of the "Riot Squad," in the feature wrestling match on next Wednesday night's show at Turner's Arena.

Known as one of the top villains of the day, Rudy is expected to be a perfect match for the Frenchman whose real name is Maurice Tillet. This is Dusek's first showing in several months. An active campaign in Canada and the East has kept the veteran showman on the go.

The Angel-Dusek match will have a one-hour time limit, with the mat monstrosity out to preserve his record of never having lost a match since coming to this country three years ago.

Nebraska Shoots For Second Place

Lincoln, Nov. 27 (AP).—Nebraska goes after second place in the Big Six football race tomorrow with Kansas State the opposition.

It is the last conference game of the season and finds Nebraska in the midst of a losing streak and Kansas State far from fearful even though the Aggies have had a bad year.

†Shouse and W. M. McIntosh entry.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOST ALERT, $4.70, $3.40, $2.40; CRIMSON LANCER, $8.90, $5.20; WALTER HAIGHT, $4.30.

MOST ALERT, off in first flight, disposed of JOANNY and NICK to take clear lead and held sway thereafter under drive. CRIMSON LANCER was in first flight early, came willingly at close and showed good effort. WALTER HAIGHT, better placed than usual early, was allowed to drift far out entering stretch and closed on own courage. VOUCHER was in thick of forward contention and tired gradually through stretch.

Daily Double—BUDGETEER and MOST ALERT Paid $18.70.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1000. For 2-year-olds; claiming. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 2:18. Off at 2:18½. Winner, Mrs. L. Palladino's ch. g. (2) by Flag Pole—Montana. Trained by C. McDonough. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:15⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WAR PAGE, $4.30, $3.30, $2.70; ROYAL FLEET, $32.10, $13.30; VICTIM, $10.30.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1000. For 3-year-olds and upward; claiming. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:42. Off at 2:42½. Winner, James Arthur's dk. b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SHRIMPIE, $12.90, $5.60, $3.10; CLYDE TOLSON, $10.90, $3.70; JOHNNIE J., $2.30.

SHRIMPIE was within striking distance from start, rallied willingly when placed to drive to take command and held CLYDE TOLSON safe in final drive. CLYDE TOLSON was in first flight from start and was wearing down winner at end. JOHNNIE J. was miserably handled. He was off poorly, was taken up sharply when between horses and closed some ground along rail. ELIMAR and CHERRYDALE ran each other into submission.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1200. For 2-year-olds; allowances. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:08. Off at 3:08½. Winner, Mrs. Donald Woodward's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PICCADILLY, $24.30, $8.30, $4.60; HORNBEAM, $3.20, $2.50; GOOD LAWYER, $3.80.

PICCADILLY, a trailer to midstretch, rallied gamely when shaken up and came with bold rush on inside to be up in final stride. HORNBEAM disposed of SOLLURE and GOOD LAWYER to open lead at sixteenth pole, but Gilbert appeared to ride overconfident at close. GOOD LAWYER raced forwardly to midstretch and then weakened. GALLANT WITCH closed gamely.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1200. All ages. Allowances. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:34. Off at 3:35. Winner, Hugh McL. Fenwick's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WHAT NOT, $7.20, $4.10, $3.10; CELAENO, $5.80, $5.10; LAUGH CLOWN, $5.10.

WHAT NOT was within striking distance from start, improved position on outside, responded when shaken up and wore down LAUGH CLOWN and was opening a gap at end. CELAENO moved up on inside and closed full of run. LAUGH CLOWN sprinted into good lead, was rated nicely to midstretch and then tired suddenly. PENOBSCOT BAY had no excuses.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1000. For 3-year-olds and upward; claiming. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:01. Off at 4:02. Winner, H. O. Collins' b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—THE THANE, $50.60, $20.70, $11.00; ONE LINK, $17.90, $16.70; GINOCA, $13.80.

THE THANE took command over ONE LINK after opening quarter and held on gamely in final drive under good handling. ONE LINK, first away, set and forced the pace and held on gamely at close. GINOCA was well placed throughout and showed good effort. KOKOMO improved position boldly on inside along backstretch and then hung in final drive. BLUE GINO was sore going to post.

EIGHTH RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $1000. For 3-year-olds and upward; claiming. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 4:30. Off at 4:31. Winner, W. J. Susini's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WHEAT, $7.30, $4.60, $4.10; LIGHT BANSET, $11.70, $8.80; DIZZY DAME, $7.50.

WHEAT was steadied close up in early stages, went to inside boldly to take command and drew out to win with speed in reserve. LIGHT BANSET was sluggish for half, moved up and closed with good energy. DIZZY DAME was hard ridden in first flight and was tiring gradually at end. SENTINEL was in first flight from start and was tiring at end.

Cocaptains Elected For '43 Cornell Eleven

Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 27 (AP).—Juniors William Wheeler, 20, Evanston, Ill., and Louis J. Daukas, 21, Nashua, N. H., have been named co-captains of the 1943 Cornell football team.

Wheeler, 170-pound product of Evanston High School, is a halfback. Daukas, who prepped at Cushing Academy, played both quarterback and center this year.

Selections at Bowie

Dear Al:

Doubirab heads a field of 11 in the $10,000 added Bryan and O'Hara Memorial Handicap. These horses will battle it out at a mile and three-sixteenths and there should be a merry fight for first money. Star Copy, Flaught, Equifox and other good ones have been named for the final big race of the meeting. As usual, there will be a nine-race program with post time for the first race at 1:15 p. m. Well, I thought I had seen some bad rides in my day but the exhibition put up by Jockey Napier on Walter Haight yesterday was the tops. The colt was closer than usual in the early part. Napier made his move entering the stretch but it was toward the outside fence. The colt tried his best through the stretch but Napier didn't even hold his head up, much less whip the 3-year-old. Walter Haight finished flying but it was on his own courage because Napier was looking at the inside horse at the finish. Just why Alan Clarke, owner of the colt, rode Napier I don't know. I wasn't paying the jockey fee, so I didn't have any say. However, Napier had some company in the bad riding division. Johnny Gilbert, who rides good and bad with the greatest of ease, failed to get Johnnie J. away from the post, then ran him into a blind switch at the half pole. All this at 4-to-5, too. In the next race, he went sound asleep on Hornbeam. This is getaway day here so get all your tack together. Monday it will be on to Charles Town. No special train to the West Virginia track this time, but there is a way of getting there and we'll save gas and tires at the same time. Trains stop at Harpers Ferry, a few miles from the track. Those who want to park their cars there and ride to the track can do so. Permission has been granted to have parking in the train yard and the track will have a watchman on duty at all times. Trains leave Washington at 8:15, 10:10 and 1:20 and arrive at Harpers Ferry at 9:40, 11:19 and 2:30. Returning the train leaves Harpers Ferry at 5:50. See you on the rail. BILL.

First race—TIDES IN has been kidding and I believe this one is much better than shown and I shall string along. SORGHO has plenty of speed and is in clever hands. STOLEN TRYST and PETE'S BET may be dangerous in this company.

Second race—DONNA LEONA has worked well and could be the right one in this rather open affair. I'm going to take my chances. KANSAS belongs close with this kind. GREY WOLF is better than that last.

Third race—DREAM PARADE barely tossed off that last and I look for a set of brackets in this company of maidens. GOLD REGNANT stopped last out but I look for a come-from-behind ride this time. NELLIE MOWLEE has an outside chance.

Fourth race—LORD VATOUT figures well in a field of this sort. Should be on top and may be hard to catch. POMPA NEGRI is a threat but may be bothered by the rail position. The post position also is against WILTON but he will be a factor.

Fifth race—GRANLAG has won two sprints and looks as if he can go on. At least he is bred for the route. TOP SERGEANT will appreciate this company and is a threat. VENTURE CAP and HER GUARDIAN gives the Jacobs entry a good chance.

Sixth race—The Bieber and Jacobs entry of FLAUGHT and BRIGHT GALLANT gets my call in the day's feature. The long route suits. DOUBLRAB has done everything asked but I believe this distance is too long. EQUIFOX is a threat.

Seventh race—SATIN CAP evidently likes this race track and needs only to run back to that last. CAUMSETT is rounding into form and will be right there. KEY RING for the minor award.

Eighth race — MAECHANCE loves this track and I see no reason for mistakes. RODIN is due to awaken. SPOON BREAD is a threat in present condition.

Ninth race—CACODEMON gets to the front occasionally and stays there. This might be the spot for just that kind of race. Has a fair stablemate in BOLIVAR. The entry of ROUGH GOING and WHITE HOT belongs in the first flight. RINGMOND is a possible surprise.

Best bet—MAECHANCE.

Redskins Off for 'Cinch' Game With Weak Detroit Lions

D.C. Reserves To Perform In Finale

Last Regular Outing Will Have No Effect on Team's Title Aspirations

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Post Staff Writer

En route to Detroit, Nov. 27.—The National Pro Football League by-laws say each team must play an 11-game schedule and for that bit of formality the Redskins left this afternoon for Detroit and Sunday's final game with the sad, sad lions.

For the first time in several years the Eastern Division title has been settled before December with the Redskins home with lengths to spare. The Western Division race has belonged to the Bears all season, so Sunday's clash is just for the record books.

Coach Ray Flaherty has promised his rookies and the seldom-used subs ample playing time in the last game before the championship play-off with the Chicago Bears in Washington December 13, but Detroit fans expect to see Sammy Baugh and their hometown pride, Andy Farkas, for a period or two at least.

You can bet your bottom dollar the Redskins will produce nothing new as they go after their tenth triumph, for the new stuff will be saved for Griffith Stadium starting Tuesday morning, when Flaherty will begin nearly two weeks of strictly secret workouts for the Bear game.

Detroit, which has not won a game from the Redskins since they moved to Washington, figures to take its eleventh consecutive beating. In 10 league games to date the Lions have scored only 35 points, an average of little more than a field goal a game. They have given up 242 points.

Despite Detroit's dismal record the Lions are the only team in the league which has held the Bears under 21 points. In the first game for the Bears after George Halas left for the Navy they beat the Lions only 16-0, scoring twice through the air and by a field goal. At halftime the count was only 6-0. Last week the Bears won the second meeting, 42-0.

Redskin Scout Dutch Bergman will leave tomorrow to watch the Bears aganist Cleveland and he will return to the Windy City next week to watch the league champions against the Cardinals in their last game. The Redskins draw an open date next week.

Missing from the Detroit-bound Redskin squad is Bob Titchenal, center, who has a Monday date in North Carolina at the Navy Pre-Flight School. The big veteran is through for the year. George Smith, who has been out since the first game of the season, will return to the lineup against the Lions and should be ready to relieve Ky Aldrich in Titchenal's absence.

Redskin headquarters yesterday reported that 259 seats have been added at Griffith Stadium for the championship game, making the total 36,000 even.

W. & M. Faces Good Season In Basketball

Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 27.—William and Mary, winner of the Big Six basketball title and semi-finalist in the Southern Conference playoff last season, will start practice shortly for the 1942-43 season with prospects of a team stronger than that of a year ago. The Indians will open against Langley Field on December 5.

Coach Dwight Steussy lost only a few squad members by graduation and returning lettermen include Glenn Knox, Al Vandeweghe, Jackie Freeman, Lester Hooker, Walter Weaver and Jim Ward.

Knox and Freeman will report after the football team concludes its season with a game at Norman, Okla., on December 5. Vandeweghe, injured in the North Carolina pre-flight grid game, will not be available until after Christmas, and Weaver, also injured in football, may be out until after the holidays, Indian coaches said.

Bob Smidl, Bob Steckroth and Leo Brenner loom as the most promising men coming up from the fresh team.

The schedule:
December 8, Langley Field, there; 10, Naval Operating Base, home; 12, Randolph-Macon, home; 16, Seton Hall, there; 19, Baltimore, there.
January 2, Apprentice, tentative; 7, V. M. I., there; 8, Virginia Tech, there; 9, Washington and Lee, there; 12, Richmond, home; 14, Hampden-Sydney, there; 20, Apprentice, tentative.
February 2, Richmond, there; 3, Hampden-Sydney, home; 8, George Washington, home; 10, Naval Air Station, home; 13, Virginia Tech, home; 19, V. M. I., Petersburg; 20, Washington and Lee, home; 23, Maryland, there; 24, Navy, Annapolis; 26, Randolph-Macon, there.

Detroit Battles Oklahoma Aggies

Detroit, Nov. 27 (AP).—The University of Detroit football team, seeking to rebound from its surprise defeat by Arkansas, will collide with the high-scoring Oklahoma A. & M. Cowboys tomorrow in the season's final game here.

The Aggies have won five, lost three and tied one. Detroit has five victories and two defeats.

Much of Detroit's attack will center upon Elmer (Tippy) Madarik, who is expected to start despite an ailing knee. The Cowboys will start their twin scoring combination of Ralph Tate and Al Ecenbarger.

Notre Dame's Offense Ready For Trojans

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Nov. 27.—They aren't the best football teams in the Nation but Notre Dame and Southern California are going to draw the largest crowd of the season here tomorrow—80,000 or more.

It's the last big fling before gasoline rationing and some of the more optimistic souls have gone off the deep end—prophesying that with fair weather the 103,000 capacity of Memorial Coliseum will be taxed.

Regardless, it is interesting to note that the size of the crowd isn't dependent on the record of the competitors. The magnet is the possibility, yea, probability, that it will be an all-out offensive battle from the kickoff to the final gun.

The Irish, with Angelo Bertelli in the lineup, throw the ball around a lot, and while their defense may leave much to be desired they have a scoring punch. They collected 20 points against Michigan and 27 against Northwestern in their last two games.

Southern California has been improving fast, has a strong running game and a deceptive aerial attack. Its forte is speed, with six sprinters available for the tailback spot, but it has a good line plunger in Fullback Bob Musick and two talented pass throwers in Southpaw Paul Taylor and the starboard firer Mickey McCardle. Mickey is the sophomore of the year here, a strong breakaway runner ever dangerous in hauling back punts.

The Trojans have all hands ready, but Coach Frank Leahy, who brings his Irish in too late for practice today, has several crippled or ailing, among them Tackle Lou Rymkus, Center Wally Ziemba and Halfback Russ Ashbaugh.

Hockey Lions Face Barons Here Tonight

Cleveland Will Present One of Greatest Combinations; Special Entertainment Planned

One of the most enthusiastic audiences yet to assemble at Uline Arena this season is anticipated tonight at 8:30 o'clock when Coach Bob Cook's Cleveland Barons, one of the American Hockey League's greatest combinations of recent years, make their 1942-43 debut locally against Washington's vengeful Lions at 8:30 o'clock.

Tonight's attendance will be boosted by the introduction of a new policy whereby servicemen in uniform and their escorts will be admitted to a special reserved section upon payment of 55 cents. This arrangement has been made by Owner Michael J. Uline in compliance with requests received from local and nearby military bases.

Lions Out for Revenge

The Lions, defeated in six of their last seven starts, are convinced that they are far better than their present record of three victories, one tie and nine defeats indicate, and will be out to avenge several indignities heaped upon them by the bold Barons of the past two seasons.

Last season Cleveland not only proved a consistent winner over the Green Tide in regular season, but also swept Washington aside in consecutive matches during the American League's championship playoffs.

In their only meeting previously this season the Barons shut out the Lions behind the superlative goal tending of Bill Beveridge, 4 to 0, while recording the first whitewashing of the current campaign.

Supporting the bitter Washington-Cleveland hockey rivalry tonight will be a special program of entertainment arranged by General Manager Lee J. Perrin.

Special Organ Music

Ida Clarke, popular local organist, again will entertain prior to the match and between periods with a special cycle of musical numbers. Perrin also will introduce a new comedy team of the ice in Charley Waite and Jack McGill, "Conga Explorers," who will feature their routine between the second and third periods.

The Lions will be bolstered by the return of Rod Lorrain, flying French winger, who rejoins the team with his ribs tightly strapped. Lorrain, who has been resting a broken rib, has been advised by his physician that he may resume action under this condition only.

Frank Ceryance, raw-boned goalie, playing on loan from Hershey, will continue in the nets in the absence of Paul Gauthier, who is still nursing an injured right leg.

Scoring Sensation

The bold Barons will introduce a scoring sensation well remembered locally in Tommy Burlington, one-eyed center, who set a new world's record for individual scoring with 124 points while skating with Atlantic City Sea Gulls in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League last season.

Burlington, a five-foot six-inch, 152-pound youngster, cracked the old Eastern League record of 102 points against the Washington Eagles at Riverside Stadium last season when he scored five points in a single game.

The Barons also will bring back their great first scoring line of Les Cunningham, center; Norm Locking, left wing, and Earl Bartholome, right wing, and will spotlight individual stars in Bud Cook, Mike Shabaga, Herb Foster, Art Giroux and Fred Robertson.

'Bama Closes Season Against Flier Eleven

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 27 (AP).—Alabama's Crimson Tide will stake its hopes for a possible Bowl bid here tomorrow in a closing engagement with the potent Athens, Ga., Navy pre-flight team.

Attendance of about 10,000 is indicated, with dopesters rating the Tide a one-touchdown favorite.

Alabama will pit a fairly good offense, backed up by one of the strongest lines in the Nation, against a brilliant offense sparked by Frank Filchock, former Indiana and Washington Redskin star.

Johnny August, the Tide's outstanding triple-threater, and Russ Craft, speedy wingback, are handicapped by injuries received in the Vanderbilt tilt and probably will not start.

The Pre-fighters have lost only to L. S. U. and tied the North Carolina pre-flight team, while the Tide has bowed to Georgia and Georgia Tech.

Owner of Grid Lions Gets Run For His Money—Wrong Way

Wealthy Mandel Learning All Angles on How To Be a Consistent Loser; It's Amazing

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Nov. 26.—At the very stiff rate of $100 a minute, owner Fred L. Mandel, jr., of the Detroit Lions might expect records, but not the kind he is getting.

Mandel's toothless entry in the National Football League has dropped 10 straight games without victory, and No. 11 is coming up Sunday, just as sure as Sammy Baugh and the Washington Redskins will be on hand to administer it. League records show seven successive defeats for Dayton in 1928, but 11—never.

Mandel, 34-year-old member of a wealthy Chicago merchantile family, has invested a third of a million dollars in pro football in Detroit in three years, and thus far the returns are nine victories, 21 defeats and two ties. The first two years were lean for an entry that never before had slithered under the .500 mark, but this is much worse.

Blew $225,000 in 1940

The franchise cost Mandel a cool $225,000 in 1940. The first season he dropped a big wad of money, but last year just about broke even. His current losses lie roughly between $50,000 and $75,000, which is very rough indeed. For 660 minutes of football, that's probably the highest price on record for goose-eggs.

Ordinarily the Lion owner could placidly take it on the chin and, like Brooklyn baseball fans, growl, "Wait'll next year." Detroit, getting uncontested first choice in the league player draft, could single out Frankie Sinkwich or Paul Governali or home-growing Dick Kleppe of Michigan State as the key payer in a rebuilt gridiron machine.

No Pro Football in '43

But Mandel admits privately that he doesn't think there will be pro football next year or any other year for the war's duration. The Lions alone have over 30 players in the service now, with others to follow when the season is over. Moreover, there's practically no source for replacements.

All this—plus the exorbitant aforesaid $100 a minute for crushing defeats—would seem to constitute grounds for utter despair. But not for Mandel. After the third beating, he hustled down to the dressing room to fire his coaching staff and hire a new one. Since then he has sat through each succeeding defeat, right down to the last minute.

Wills, Stribling Winner May Meet Mamakos

A couple of developments along the local boxing front yesterday heightened interest in Monday night's 8-round feature match at Turner's Arena between Frankie Wills, District welterweight champion, and Ken Stribling, the local colored scrapper.

The first was an announcement from Humphrey DeCola, new manager of Steve Mamakos, that his Golden Greek, now back in fighting trim, would be interested in meeting the winner of the Wills-Stribling battle.

Number two was a declaration from Bob Hayden, Wills' trainer, that Chris Dundee, manager of Georgie Abrams and a number of other topnotch Eastern scrappers, wants to bring Frankie to New York for several matches, provided he wins from Stribling.

Promoter Joe Turner added his say-so by announcing that Lew Burston, who with Johnny Attell handles Al (Bummy) Davis, was due in town tonight to talk terms regarding a Davis-Wills match—provided, of course, the District champion wins Monday.

DeCola, who has succeeded Matt Twomey as Mamako's pilot, said he would be interested in a bout with either Wills or Stribling, if the guarantee was sufficient. He said Steve's match with Jake LaMotta in Boston had been indefinitely postponed, due to LaMotta injuring his hand.

Wills already has attracted the attention of Eastern managers and promoters, having scored 10 straight victories, his latest over "Stoney" Lewis.

Promoter Turner completed his card yesterday. It shows 38 rounds. Turner said he was offering two extra matches, in view of last week's Danny Petro-Billy Reed postponement. Nick Latsios of Alexandria was booked to face Leon Kennedy in a six-rounder. Two heavywe'ghts—Leo Matriaccini of Baltimore, former Diamond Belt champion, and Howard Jones, young Wilmington battler—were secured for another six.

Clint Conway, Newark heavyweight, will seek his seventh straight professional victory, facing Jack Jordon of Reading in a six.

Danny Petro will take on Frankie Bashara of Philadelphia, in a six, while his brother, Charlie, will tangle with Tuffy Cummings of the Royal British Navy.

Coach Harlow Sworn in Navy

and then went to Western Maryland as director of athletics and football coach.

Although handicapped by lack of adequate material at Harvard, he succeeded in developing strong teams and won at least one upset game each season.

The 1941 season was his most successful for, after early season defeats at the hands of Penn and Cornell, Harvard defeated Dartmouth, Brown, Army, Princeton and Yale, and tied Navy.

On the other hand, the current season was his poorest at Harvard, for the Crimson defeated only Princeton and Brown, and tied William and Mary.

Legion Pin Handicap Set At Brookland

The Bunker Hill Post American Legion bowling handicap will be rolled today at Brookland Recreation, starting at 10 this morning and continuing until midnight. Scratch for the event is 125 on a two-thirds handicap basis, and the entry fee for the three games is $2. "Doc" Gartrell, Brookland manager, is guaranteeing the first prize of $75. Besides the main cash awards, many merchandise prizes will be given to winners. The event is open to both men and women duckpinners whose averages for the last season did not exceed 125.

ARCADIA

The Ladies Independent Bowling League was sparked by Mrs. J. W. Owen's 140 for her Forsythe Shoe quintet, while Helen Wilson, Greyhounds, had 349 to lead for individual set. The Greyhounds also proved to be the best team on the mapleways with a 571 game and 1607 set.

SPILLWAY

M. Hale's 121-344 and George Kuhl's 124-344 helped their Nichols Market boys in the Commercial "C" loop to win a pair over the league leading Wolves and drop the latter out of first place in last night's play. Meanwhile, the Thunderbolts, led by Eddie Kerge's 122-344, were winning a sweep over the Miscellaneous Five to take over the front spot. The Happy Five took the odd tilt from Hardy's All-Stars with Charles Lombardy's 129-337 supplying the punch and despite McGee's 149-369 for the losers.

GREENWAY

The National Bowling League was topped by Schroeder, Nesline's Cafe, and Dan Vehmeyer, Cardinals, with respective scores of 143 and 379, while Heller's 372 was near high for the play. The Cardinals proved the best team on the boards by winning a pair from Hydro and posting highs of 614 and 1716 as well. Three teams scored sweeps over opponents; Official Cleaners over the Jeeps, National Electric over Clothes Mart and Schriber Decorating whitewashed the SWC boys.

SILVER SPRING

Mrs. Atwood, of the Kenwood team in the Women's Country Club Bowling League, was top pinswoman for the play yesterday morning with a 113 single and 312 set which paced her quintet to team highs of 506 and 1402. Mrs. Goldsmith, of the Woodmont five, had near highs of 111,290 which enabled her team to win the odd game from Congressional No. 1.

ALEXANDRIA

The Fort Belvoir Camouflage pin loop was topped last evening by Prince, Engineers, and Ed Miller, Photos, with a 139 game and 339 set, repectively. The Equipment boys rolled high team game of 493 while the Engineers took set honors after a 1380 total.

Boston College Plays for Bid To Sugar Bowl

By the Associated Press

Boston, Nov. 27.—For the second time in three years the powerful Boston College Eagles, ear-marked for another trip to the Sugar Bowl, came to the end of their regular season as 4-1 favorites over Holy Cross for their traditional football clash tomorrow at Fenway Park.

And, for the third time in a row, the Eagles have a wholesome respect for their objective foemen, despite the latters' unimpressive preliminary season.

Two years ago, another unbeaten B. C. team, after being out-fought by the Crusaders for more than 50 minutes, managed to recover a fumble and eke out a 7-0 victory. Last season a late touchdown gave them a 14-13 win over a very lightly regarded Holy Cross team.

It is likely that Boston College will be without one of its regulars for the first time this season, for co-Capt. Fred Naumetz has been sidelined with a bronchial attack all week. Coach Denny Myers has such slim hopes about Naumetz that he named Manny Zissis, a 205-pound sophomore, as his starting center. Otherwise the same starters who launched B. C.'s eight triumphs will be in their regular berths.

Holy Cross, also equipped with a heavy and powerful line, has several dangerous offensive threats, including Johnny Bezemes, Bobby Sullivan, Johnny Grigas and Freshman Joe McAfee, to vie with the Eagles' mighty Mike Holovak, Bob Mangene, Mickey Connolly and Ed Doherty in what shapes up as a free-scoring engagement.

Boston College		Holy Cross
Furbush	L.E.	E. Murphy
G. Bouley	L.T.	Landrigan
Fiorentino	L.G.	Digangi
Zissis	Center	Titus
Canale	R.G.	Albergnini
Repko	R.T.	Connor
Currivan	R.E.	Swiacki
Doherty	Q.B.	Ball
Mangene	L.H.	Bezemes
Holovak	R.H.	McAfee
Connolly	F.B.	Sullivan

Kickoff—1:30 P. M. (E. W. T.).

80,000 to See Irish Oppose Southern Calif.

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 27.—Notre Dame and Southern California, rivals of long standing, are expected to draw the biggest crowd through the gridiron turnstiles tomorrow with 80,000 listed as the probable attendance.

Georgia and Georgia Tech might draw that many fans if they had room at Athens, but as it is 40,000 fans are expected to sit in on the proceedings. Ohio State's Western Conference champs also expect 40,000 for their game with Bernie Bierman's Iowa Seahawks, while the annual tussle between unbeaten Boston College and Holy Cross figures to draw 41,000.

In other years Army and Navy would have played before the season's largest turnout, but since it is being held at Annapolis under ticket distribution restrictions, only 20,000 fans are expected.

Other probable attendances:

North Carolina Preflight-Fordham, 22,000; Villanova-Temple, 20,000; Iowa-Michigan, 15,000; Indiana-Fort Knox, 5000; Illinois-Camp Grant, 20,000; Kansas State-Nebraska, 12,000; Oregon State-Michigan State, 7500; Oklahoma A. and M. Detroit, 7500; Clemson-Auburn, 12,000; Duke-Jacksonville Naval Air Station, 12,000; Vanderbilt-Tennessee, 20,000; West Virginia-Miami, 10,000; Baylor-Rice, 15,000; Washington-Washington State, 30,000; Texas Christian-Southern Methodists, 12,000, and St. Mary's Preflight-Stanford, 15,000.

Beavers Rule Choice Today Over Spartans

By the Associated Press

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 27.—An injury-plagued Michigan State team closes its season against Oregon State here tomorrow with the odds steadily mounting in favor of the Beavers, who like the Spartans, have experienced a so-so campaign after winning the 1942 Rose Bowl title.

A crowd of 9000 is expected to attend the first meeting of the two teams since 1915 when an unheralded Oregon State eleven came East to stun the old Michigan Aggies, 20 to 0.

The clash earlier was rated a toss-up, but injury to Dick Kleppe, Michigan State's sterling all-around performer, has deflated Spartan hopes of a victory.

Coach Lon Stiner pronounced his Beaver squad in its best shape of the season following a snappy drill at Macklin Field this afternoon. It was the squad's second workout since leaving Oregon.

Fire Eleven Faces Marines In Baltimore

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Nov. 27.—The annual contest between the football teams of the Baltimore Firemen nad the Quantico Marines is set for tomorrow at Municipal Stadium, the last game of the season with a Baltimore setting.

It's the fourteenth annual struggle between the Smoke Eaters and the Devil Dogs, and one that promises plenty of football. About 30,000 are expected to be on hand for the doings.

The usual Marine Corps parade, however, will be a war casuality, and the uniformed rank of leatherneck rooters will stay in camp. The band will be present.

To retain some of the color that usually preceded the kickoff in this game, more than 700 firemen will drill under the direction of Fire Chief Howard Travers and Battalion Chief Robert S. Tate.

Navy Appoints Adm. G. D. Murray Air Training Chief

Rear Admiral George D. Murray, who commanded an aircraft carrier in the Pacific early in the war, assumed duties yesterday as chief of the Air Intermediate Training Command and commandant of the Naval Air Training Center at the air station at Pensacola, Fla. The Navy announced his appointment to the command, which is a new office.

A native of Boston, Murray holds the Navy Cross for distinguished service while in command of an aircraft carrier at the time of the Navy's raid on the Marshall and Gilbert Islands last January 31 and subsequent activity.

One of the Navy's veteran aviators, Admiral Murray previously had served at Pensacola, having been superintendent of aviation training when aviation cadet training was established in 1935.

From March, 1937, to June, 1938, Murray served as executive officer of the aircraft carrier Saratoga and then took command of the aircraft tender Langley from June, 1938, to June, 1939.

Following that duty, he was assigned to the Bureau of Aeronautics in Washington in 1939 until March, 1941, when he assumed a command at sea.

Auxiliary Police May Be Given Winter Coats

Pleas of auxiliary policemen for more adequate winter clothing may be answered soon by the District Commissioners.

Charles Stofberg, assistant to Commissioner John R. Young, said yesterday that the Commissioners are considering expenditure of $25,000 for winter coats, although nothing definite has been decided yet.

Queried because of numerous complaints received by The Post from auxiliary policemen, Stofberg said that a Navy pea jacket type of coat is contemplated.

OCD has already supplied the auxiliary police with helmets and arm bands, and the Commissioners have supplied them with raincoats, shields, overseas caps, visibility belts and whistles.

"If it is decided to spend the money to furnish the coats, the money may come out of the District Blackout Fund or a new appropriation," Stofberg said.

Prospective Newlywed Quizzed

INTERVIEW—Virginia Coleman of the Junior League interviews Seaman Vernon Cadwell at the marriage license bureau. Miss Coleman is one of four volunteers who aided the WPB in quizzing prospective newlyweds yesterday in what apparently was the beginning of an effort to gauge curtailment of the production of household furnishings

Some 70 applicants for marriage licenses here yesterday found that love's secret dreams, also, must be spilled to the Government on a lengthy questionnaire.

This questionnaire, containing more than 100 lines for notations, was distributed by four women volunteers from the Junior League to the applicants in what appeared to be a War Production Board move to gauge production of household furnishings.

Newlyweds Furniture Buyers

Reasoning that newlyweds ordinarily constitute the largest group of customers for household goods, WPB instituted the experiment with a two-fold purpose in mind. According to Edwin P. Reubens of the WPB's Office of Civilian Supply, the objectives are: to determine the proportion of marriages that result in the setting up of new homes, and to determine the types and numbers of new items required.

Thus, Reubens said, a set of measurements could be obtained to guide a systematic program for whittling production to necessary minimum.

Another purpose that may be served by such a Nation-wide poll, Reubens added, would be to concentrate production of civilian essentials in fewer factories—in this way releasing valuable manpower for war jobs. Such a system of concentration, he pointed out, already is in practice in England.

Whether the unusual technique will be applied throughout the country depends on the success of the District survey, it was explained. Interviewing of applicants will continue through Monday, and analysis of results then will be made by the Office of Civilian Supply.

Results Not Made Public

Though no results have been made public, interviewers indicated that a substantial percentage of those questioned—perhaps 50 per cent—will not be required to make large purchases in outfitting their homes. These said they would either live with parents, receive gifts, or move into furnished apartments.

'Toni Jo' Bids Farewell to Convict Mate

By the Associated Press

Lake Charles, La., Nov. 27.—Mrs. Annie Beatrice (Toni Jo) Henry, 26-year-old murderess scheduled to die tomorrow, bade farewell by telephone today to her convict-husband.

The woman's last request was granted by Sheriff Henry Reid, jr., who arranged the telephone conversation with Claude A. (Cowboy) Henry in the Huntsville (Tex.) penitentiary from which he twice escaped in an effort to see his wife.

Mrs. Henry told the husband she had feared for his life during his escape this week and advised him not to be "so rebellious."

"Hurry up," she said, "and get that zoot suit off and walk out the front door like a man so your mother will be proud of you."

Henry is serving a 50-year term for killing a San Antonio officer. Mrs. Henry told him she hated to leave him and that she "wouldn't have had you make that break for anything in the world."

The woman's husband told her he was sorry he did not get over in his attempt to release her from jail and added he thought the Texas officers should have let him come over to see her.

Following the conversation, Mrs. Henry thanked the sheriff and settled back in her cell to await death in the portable electric chair at the Calcasieu Parish Jail about noon tomorrow.

House Leaders See Little Hope Of War Powers

House leaders yesterday conceded only an outside chance of legislating this session to give the President new powers for suspending tariff, immigration and other laws, but deferred until this morning a final decision on whether to let the proposal die or attempt to force passage.

Chairman Doughton (Democrat) of North Carolina, head of the House Ways and Means Committee, which has charge of the legislation, said after a conference with Speaker Rayburn that there was considerable doubt about the possibility of enacting new war powers for the President before the present Congress ends.

Doughton declined to call the bill dead for this session and later explained that a decision was expected following a conference today between House and Senate leaders.

Doughton said he had reached no conclusion on the suggestion, presented earlier on the floor by Majority Leader McCormack, that the Ways and Means Committee approve a war powers bill that would run until March 1, or April 1, giving the Administration power to deal with situations that might hamper the war effort, until the next Congress could work out a permanent arrangement.

Republican members who have opposed any broad grant of new powers showed scant interest in the McCormack proposal.

Jeffers Sees Tubeless Tire Demonstration

By the Associated Press

Rubber Administrator William M. Jeffers saw a tubeless tire mounted on an automobile rim yseterday.

"I think," he remarked, "there's something to this; I'd like to know everything about it."

The demonstration, arranged by John B. McGay, Tulsa, Okla., manufacturer, took place in the District municipal garage.

C. N. Emmons, District garage superintendent, said after the tire had been mounted on a spare rim and inflated:

"That tire's ready to roll now. We know because we already have four of them on this car we use for shop purposes. One of those tires has gone 1000 miles, another 800, another 700 and the fourth 400. They're very satisfactory; in fact, we can't tell the difference."

After the demonstration, Oklahoma's Governor-elect Robert S. Kerr, who was one of the interested bystanders, turned to L. D. Tompkins, assistant rubber administrator, and asked:

"What are you going to do after the present supply of tubes runs out?"

"Use this," replied Tompkins, pointing to the mounted tubeless tire.

McGay and Victor F. Barnett, chairman of the Tulsa war transportation committee, later told a reporter they thought "that was a most significant statement."

The Tulsa manufacturer explained he evolved the idea of a tubeless tire "when I was puttering around after a couple of tubes went bad on me."

"All you have to do is take the tube out of an ordinary casing, get a big valve such as has been used on trucks and attach it to the rim, put the casing back on and inflate it," he said. "It may be necessary to use a tire-mounting tool, but filling stations or tire shops mount most of the tires nowadays and they have that tool."

Jones Fetes Jones At D. C. Home For Aged, Infirm

The Joneses feted the Joneses last night at the District Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains, in the presence of 100 residents.

Frank Jones, the home's oldest resident, was given a party on his ninety-sixth birthday by the Vaughn Class of Galvary Baptist Church, led by Thomas Jones, sr., second vice president of the class. They are not related. Seven-year-old Thomas Jones, jr., son of the class official, sang "I Remember Jesus," and his 14-year-old sister, Betty, played piano solos.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jones and the other residents of the home shared the ice cream and birthday cake provided by the class, and everyone sang old-fashioned gospel hymns. Thomas Jones, sr., and other members of the Vaughn Class have been conducting religious services at the home on the last Friday of each month for five years.

Weak-Minded Home Seeks Employes

District welfare officials said yesterday that every effort would be exerted immediately to replace lost personnel at the District Training School in Laurel, Md. and thus reduce or eliminate inmate escapes.

An official tour of the institution, maintained for the feeble-minded, on Thursday was followed yesterday by a conference between Dr. James Lewald, superintendent; Public Welfare Director Conrad Van Hyning, and the director's assistant, Gay Shepperson.

Inability to obtain custodial employes, who are paid $1200 a year for an average work week of 56 hours and whose expenses mount because many are compelled by living conditions to commute, was said to be the reason for much of the institution's difficulty. Escapes have numbered about 30 in less than a month.

Staff Short 35 Persons

The conferees indicated that there is a probability of reinforcing the custodial group at an early time. At present, 135 of a normal staff of 170 employes are on duty. It has been reported that some of the escaped inmates were later found working and earning more pay than their former keepers.

There are some 650 inmates lodged in 12 modern buildings situated on 956 acres. The dormitories were found by the visiting officials to be spotlessly clean but every department of the institution was suffering from a shortage of personnel.

Most escaping inmates have been chronic in the practice, it was said. They are not considered dangerous. Commitment to the institution is made through the District Court.

V.S. Mersch Named Register of Wills

President Roosevelt yesterday sent to the Senate the nomination of Victor S. Mersch to be District Register of Wills, to succeed Theodore F. Cogswell, who resigned on Wednesday to become a major in the Army Transportation Service.

Mersch, whose appointment was recommended to the White House by all 12 District Court judges, has been serving as reputy register since 1927. He lives at 3615 Quesada Street Northwest. Cogswell's resignation will not be officially effective until January 26, 1943, but Mersch will take over the duties of the post immediately.

Senate Group Plans Hearings On Puerto Rican Food Shortage

By the Associated Press

A five-man Senate committee headed by Senator Chavez (Democrat) New Mexico, started planning last night to begin public hearings soon on Puerto Rico's food shortage under authority granted them by the Senate after a heated debate.

The controversy on the floor was not on the resolution for the investigation, which had no opposition, but on whether the committee also should investigate the administration of Governor Rexford Guy Tugwell.

Senator Vandenberg (Republican) Michigan, insisted that it should, calling Tugwell "a frank revolutionary" and "the Don Quixote of the New Deal." Senator Wiley (Republican) Wisconsin, then offered an amendment that political as well as social and economic conditions be investigated.

Majority Leader Barkley and Senator Lucas (Democrat) Illinois, chairman of the Audit and Control Committee, backed the resolution but insisted that the investigators stick to its terms and confine themselves to the food crisis and shipping shortage.

Barkley said of Tugwell:

"He may be a revolutionary. So was Jefferson. So was Lincoln. So was Theodore Roosevelt, because they had ideas a lot of people could not accept."

Wiley Amendment Loses

Wiley's amendment was defeated on a voice vote, after Vandenberg himself had disavowed it because it would be "impractical" and would cost more than the $5000 allowed in the resolution. But Vandenberg said he hoped the committee at least would recommend a later investigation of the political situation.

Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, chairman of the Territories and Insular Affairs Committee, appointed a subcommittee composed of Chavez, author of the resolution, and Senators Bone (Democrat), Washington; Ellender (Democrat), Louisiana; Nye (Republican), North Dakota, and Danaher (Republican), Connecticut.

Chavez said the first phase of the inquiry would be here, and later, if desirable, the group would go to Puerto Rico.

Vandenberg referred to "the amazing administration of Dr. Tugwell," and said that ever since the Senate confirmed Tugwell's appointment by one vote in 1941, "the musical comedy 'Hellzapoppin' has had its Puerto Rican counterpart in real life.

When Vandenberg cited that the House Agriculture Committee had approved a 15 million dollar food appropriation for the island only after amending it so that more of the money would not be available during Tugwell's administration, Barkley declared:

"A Lick at Tugwell"

"It seems to me the House committee was more interested in striking a lick at Governor Tugwell than in feeding the people of Puerto Rico, for they are apparently willing for people to die of starvation if Tugwell is still in the governorship."

Vandenberg agreed that the committee's action was "totally indefensible," but said the very fact it was driven to such a position showed there was something worth investigating in Tugwell's administration.

Vandenberg said the Puerto Rican Attorney General, George A. Malcolm, was discharged on November 5 by President Roosevelt with "no charges, no explanation and no opportunity to defend himself, and it seems to me the real reason was that he was guilty of the high crime of pleading that we remain Americans."

"If there is a food crisis we ought to investigate it," Vandenberg said. "But if there is a Tugwell crisis we ought to investigate it, too."

Tugwell's Impatience

He said Tugwell had shown an "enthusiastic impatience with the American way of life," and called him a "starry-eyed dreamer who has already cost us hundred of millions of dollars, dissipated with little to show for it except exploded nonsense."

He said he frankly admired Tugwell's sincerity and honesty, "if not his wisdom and dependability."

Bargley said twice that he "held no brief for Dr. Tugwell," but that the mere mention of his name "frequently causes internal and sometimes external explosions in the Senate."

Senator Norris (Independent) of Nebraska, objected to what he called an attempt to "crucify" Tugwell under a resolution "having to do with starving people."

Norris said his own acquaintance with Tugwell was slight, "but I don't believe he is dangerous on the streets."

Accident Unit Placed Under Traffic Bureau

Abolition of the police accident investigation unit as "an independent unit," and incorporation with the traffic division, was announced yesterday by Police Chief Edward J. Kelly.

Effective Monday, the change relieves Inspector Arthur E. Miller, District traffic supervisor, of command and places the 40-man squad under direct command of Capt. William J. Cunningham, traffic division head.

Though relieved of actual command over the unit which he established in November, 1940, Inspector Miller will remain "as inspector in charge and will supervise all traffic work in the District," Kelly asserted.

Kelly's order also placed "all units and branches, the collateral and records offices and all civilian employes of the traffic division under the direct command of the captain in charge."

Inspector Miller was ordered "to make an immediate and comprehensive survey" of all accidents; to hold frequent meetings with precinct commanders to discuss traffic problems, and to confer frequently with the major and superintendent and District traffic authorities.

Under the latter instruction, Miller is expected, it was said, to maintain accurate records showing the "causes, locations, time, weather conditions, age, race and sex of those involved and all other pertinent data" of every serious traffic accident.

New Board Recommended

It was explained that with the aid of these facts, Miller was to set up an effective "selective enforcement program" in cooperation with the precinct commanders.

By "selective enforcement" Kelly pointed out he means enforcement of a particular regulation in a particular area. Need for such enforcement is to be determined from facts collected by the accident investigators, he said.

"If, for example," Kelly stated, "we find that accidents on Rhode Island Avenue are caused by speeding, or weaving in and out, traffic officers on that street will be acquainted with this fact and ordered to concentrate their efforts against these violators."

Shakeup of the command of the AIU was motivated by a recommendation of a three-man investigative board appointed by Kelly at the direction of Commissioner John Russell Young almost a year ago.

Composed of Inspectors Harvey G. Callahan and Milton D. Smith and Capt. Oscar J. Letterman, the board urged that the AIU be a part of the Traffic Division and "not an independent unit." It was also recommended that all records and reports of the unit be under the supervision of the Traffic Division's captain.

Though the recommendations were at first attacked by the Traffic Advisory Council, this group later approved the move.

Inspector Miller organized the unit following his return from a year's study at the Northwestern University's Traffic Institute. He recommended at the outset that the unit have at least 60 men, but agreed to the 40-man compromise when Commissioner Young objected to having "too many men doing nothing but investigating accidents."

Young remained skeptical as to the worth of the unit and last fall ordered "an exhaustive probe." He threatened at that time to abolish the squad entirely "because accidents haven't decreased since its

Extinction Threatened

Opposition from citizen groups, automobile clubs and the Traffic Advisory Council, coupled with recommendations of the three police officers led Young to reconsider. He has since approved of the accident unit and has strengthened it by permitting the addition of a full lieutenant, a detective and a plain-clothes investigator.

It has always functioned aside from the Traffic Division and has been directed by Inspector Miller, organization."

Placed at $1.65 by Henderson Ceiling on Best Silk Stockings

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

There being no fury like a woman who has been charged too much for silk stockings, Price Administrator Leon Henderson struck out for tranquillity yesterday by setting up Nation-wide uniform price ceilings.

Establishing penalties, Henderson invited the girls to give the Black Market the works.

On and after December 3, the OPA decreed, the top price for the finest quality full-fashioned silk hose will be $1.65 a pair, with 15 cents a pair extra allowed for outsizes.

From this peak, the ceilings range downward to 69 cents for the coarsest first quality circular knits. Substandard grades range similarly from $1.50 to 35-cent bottom.

The price order provided for a penalty of three times the overcharge or $50, whichever is greater.

Ceilings have already been fixed for nylon hose.

From the toes, so to speak, the OPA turned its attention to higher matters, announcing that it was investigating the high price of "blended yarn" sweaters.

These sweaters are made of wool mixed with other fibers, such as rayon and cotton. The OPA has gotten complaints of both mixtures being sold for more money than the law allows for pure wool sweaters.

Extended yesterday until December 12 was the regulation which set up price ceilings on fall and winter outerwear for women, children and girls. By then, the OPA expects to issue price rules for spring things.

Obituaries

Services Set Monday for Dr. Gearhart

Funeral services for Dr. Clyde Marshall Gearhart, 61, "dentist of four Presidents," will be held Monday at 10 a. m. at Hysong's funeral parlor, 1300 N Street Northwest, with burial at Rock Creek Cemetery. Dr. Gearhart died unexpectedly Thursday.

DR. GEARHART

A well-known Washington dentist for many years, Dr. Gearhart was among the first three dental surgeons in the Navy when commissioned in 1912. As lieutenant commander, he served on the Naval Examining Board during World War I.

Dr. Gearhart was one of the charter members of the American Academy of Periodontology and in 1922 served as its president. He wrote several textbooks on the subject. A graduate of the Ohio College of Dental Surgery, he later took some postgraduate work at the University of Michigan and at one time taught at Ann Arbor.

The first periodontist in Washington, he was chairman of the legislative committee of the American Dental Association and an officer of the District Dental Society. He also was a member of the Army-Navy Club and the Washington Golf and Country Club.

Dr. Gearhart, who is said to have been dentist to Presidents Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover, lost his first wife in the Knickerbocker Theater disaster here in 1922, when he himself suffered severe injuries. He married Mrs. Ethel McElroy in 1939.

Dr. Gearhart is survived by his wife, who resides at the Willard Hotel, and two daughters, Mrs. James Knight and Miss Jean McElroy, Miami Beach, Fla.

Senate Democrats Merging for Power

Steering Committee To Have Renewed Hand in Policies

By Robert DeVore
Post Staff Writer

Senate Democrats have reached an understanding with their leadership that individually gives each majority Senator greater opportunity to bring his views to bear on controversial issues and collectively puts the conservative wing of the party in the strongest position it has held since the advent of the New Deal.

This development was made clear in the meeting of the Steering Committee yesterday which reliable observers pronounced completely harmonious in contrast to the open bitterness that a few days ago attended the intra-party fight over the antipoll tax bill.

Recently, the Steering Committee, composed of key Senate Democrats and formerly the machinery for determination of party policy, has met less frequently than in former years.

More Cooperation

Now, it is understood, the committee will meet with more regularity to make determinations on the majority legislative program. It has also been agreed that there will be more conferences embracing the full Democratic membership and at which every majority Senator will have a chance to be heard.

These conferences may be given caucus standing with the understanding that the decision of the majority of those participating would bind all participants.

Majority Leader Barkley of Kentucky told reporters after the committee meeting that a decision had been reached not to call up controversial legislation in the Senate for the life of the present Congress.

The decision killed, at least until after the new Congress convenes in January, the highly controversial bill to authorize expenditure of 300 million dollars in Federal funds to aid State educational systems.

No Stated Meetings

Barkley said the committee felt that inasmuch as the education bill has not passed the House, there would be little use in bringing it before the Senate in the relatively few days remaining before the expiration of the Congress.

On the question of further meetings of the committee, the Senator said there was no agreement that the committee should meet at regular or stated periods, but would be called together "as often as seems necessary."

No decision was reached on adjournment of Congress, Barkley said, but Senate and House leaders are expected to get together in a few days to see if it may be possible to suspend legislative activity about the middle of next month.

Dealers Hit

Scrap Drives Ease Steel Shortages

As War Production Board officials viewed an easier steel scrap situation with satisfaction, E. C. Barringer, president and executive secretary of the Scrap Iron & Steel Institute, Inc., charged yesterday that scrap dealers "may be left holding the bag" as a result.

Steel mills are now "so comfortable in regard to supplies that they have become extremely choosey," Barringer said.

A WPB official acknowledged that steel furnaces now had a six weeks' reserve supply of scrap, but pointed out that expanding ship and airplane programs may well create another "tight" scrap supply situation in 1943.

Barringer said that a leading steel mill of eastern Pennsylvania had canceled some scrap contracts with New York, New Jersey and New England dealers and that other mills "are taking advantage of technicalities to reject the kind of material they were freely accepting a month ago."

"The net effect of these policies by certain steel mills and blast furnaces, as they feel more secure, is to discriminate against salvage drive scrap which the public generously donated," said Barringer. "Dealers realize that drive scrap is light and inferior and that steel mills must use it in small proportions with the preferred heavy grades, but the noncooperative attitude of these consumers is in sharp contrast to the spirit manifested by the public, the newspapers and the dealers."

The institute said that October saw all records for scrap consumption broken, with use of 4,883,000 tons, compared with 4,556,000 in September and 4,857,000 in May, the prevoius record month.

cently, also became wealthy as bankers. Mei-Ling married the leader of the Chinese army in 1927.

At an early age Madame Chiang attended a private school at Summit, N. J., and later studied under private tutors at Wesleyan College in Macon, Ga., where her older sisters were regular students.

In 1913 she entered Wellesley College and was graduated in 1917 with honors. After graduation she returned to China.

R.A.F., American Planes Carry Out Raids Over France

London, Nov. 27 (INS).—American and British bombers and fighters heavily attacked objectives in northern France and the Low Countries this afternoon, an air ministry communique announced tonight.

Huge American-built Boston bombers raided an industrial plant at Ijmuiden, on the northwest coast of Holland, near The Hague, while Mustang fighter-bombers blasted railway and water transport targets in northern France and the Netherlands.

British Spitfires carried out an offensive sweep over northern France and the Low Countries, bombing and strafing military objectives. One Spitfire failed to return, the communiqque said.

Dog Digs Hole To Save Master, 3, From Freezing

Somerset, Pa., Nov. 27 (AP).—Three-year-old Kenneth Eugene Slagle, jr., wandered 3 miles from his home in the freezing cold of the Allegheny Mountains yesterday—but his faithful collie dog saw to it that no harm befell him.

After State police and six volunteer fire companies searched for the boy six hours, he was found safe in a farm field.

Fireman Thomas Bowman said the dog had dug a hole in the ground in which its little master could lie, safe from the cold wind. There Mr. Bowman found the boy and dog, snuggled happily against each other.

the Don and Volga Rivers in an effort to smash forever the therat to the Volga.

Of the fighting northwest of Stalingrad the communique said "our cavalry units encircled the Hitlerites in a large populated place and are fighting for its occupation." In the same general area the Russians were crediting with capturing 51 more tanks, 5 guns, 8 mortars, 1000 rifles and large enemy food stocks.

Southwest of Stalingrad on the lower arm of the Russian pincers movement the Soviets acknowledged repeated German counter-attacks, but said their troops still were gaining ground, presumably along the Stalingrad-Novorossisk railway toward Kotelnikovski. In one battle 600 Germans fell, the communique said.

In the Nalchik-Tuapse sectors of the Mid-Caucasus the Russians said their troops still were holding and that more than 300 Germans were killed and hundreds of others captured.

Special Bulletins Discontinued

The Stalingrad offensive began November 19, and the Russians had issued five special bulletins in five days, a practice discontinued indefinitely last night. Before the midnight communique was distributed this was the general picture of the situation:

(The German radio said another Russian offensive on a curving 200-mile line northwest of Moscow had resulted in deep tank wedges in German defenses from Rzhev to Velikie Luki, 100 miles from Latvia. The Russians gave no intimation of this drive and the German high command said these attacks as well as those around Stalingrad had collapsed.)

Stubborn fighting continued in Stalingrad, but the Russians said they were advancing house by house. There was no sign of a German retreat from the fortifications they held. A portion of the "Red October" factory was reported retaken.

Steamroller Russian columns advancing from the northwest to the southwest and overrunning important fertile farm lands far west of the city in the great Don loop were posing an increasing threat of entrapment for the survivors of 300,000 enemy troops in the Volga salient.

Dispatches said war materials were arriving in Stalingrad by land for the first time in months. The garrison previously had depended on the Volga, now hazardous because of huge ice blocks.

As Russian communications improved, German routes conversely deteriorated. The Russians said they had recaptured hundreds of miles of rail lines converging on Stalingrad. The railway leading due west to Likhaya and the other to the southwest across the northern Caucasus were cut and held for considerable distances.

The Likhaya Railway had been cleared for 90 miles west of Stalingrad to beyond Surovikino, and the Red army mopping up the Don loop was said to be menacing the main Moscow-Rostov Railway. Down the North Caucasus line, the Russians said they were three-fourths of the way to Kotelnikovski. The noon communique listed the capture of 19 locomotives, 100 coaches and 168 gasoline tanks among other large booty.

Between the west and southwest lines, the Russians said they were taking so much land that the Germans would have a tremendous task reconquering the region. Cavalry supported by tanks, planes and infantry was in the vanguard of advance.

Winter whistled back over the swirling Stalingrad battles of maneuver bringing with it dense, gray fog which grounded some but not all planes. Perhaps this assist from nature enabled the Russians to surprise and capture an enemy airdrome where dispatches said dozens of undamaged planes were found. The Germans had time to destroy a few others, but could not take off.

The cone-shaped German-held corridor, roughly centered by the Don in its westward course to Rostov, was reported less than 40 miles wide at points, and it is through this funnel the Germans must retreat if they decide to withdraw from Stalingrad proper. The Russians were about 90 miles west of Stalingrad at a point south of Chernyshevskaya where Red Star said the advance rolled several miles capturing several settlements.

Only small-scale fighting took place in the Caucasus. The communique said the Russians were fortifying their positions southeast of Nalchik. Officially, the report said only "intermittent artillery dueling" took place on the northwest front around Rzhev.

Congressional Blocs Admit Inability to Halt Gas Rationing

Each warned that voluntary rationing could not be counted on to conserve the tires now in use, and said the Nation could not take a chance. Jeffers said that the next year tire replacements would fill only 60 to 65 per cent of demand, but offered this brighter outlook for the following year:

"If all goes well (in synthetic rubber making) we should be able to allocate important quantities of rubber for civilian tires in the early months of 1944. Thus, if there is no hitch in the program, we should be able in 1944 to replace in a large measure the automobile tires now in use on the 27 million passenger cars and 5 million trucks operating in the United States.

In attacking Henderson, Representative Anderson (Democrat) of New Mexico declared that the Price Administrator's radio speech of Thursday night had labeled every farmer and every person who opposed rationing either "ignorant" or "intentionally traitorous."

Anderson said the Baruch report on rubber had picked the Office of Defense Transportation rather than OPA to fix the travel curtailment policy, but that while ODT opposed national rationing, "OPA fixed the policy."

Representative Hebert (Democrat) of Louisiana said that if ever Henderson "proved himself unfit to hold office, he proved it last night (in the radio speech)."

"The greatest contribution that could be made to the war effort today" shouted Hebert, "would be for the President to fire Leon Henderson."

Representative Springer (Republican) of Indiana charged that the rubber problem had been "mishandled in Washington," and said the national rationing threatened to cripple war production of food. This view was indorsed by Representative Wickersham (Democrat) of Oklahoma, who said the rationing would hurt, rather than help, the war effort.

Representative Short (Republican), of Missouri declared that any man who made such a statement as attributed to Henderson in his radio speech "should be arrested and found guilty of indecent intellectual exposure." Representative Hoffman (Republican) of Michigan suggested the word "gall" be substituted for "intellectual."

Vanity, Vanity . . .

In Traffic Court yesterday, a young Negro messenger for the Office of Petroleum Co-ordinator was fined $5 for leaving his motorcycle in front of the wrong sign at a Munitions Building parking space. Judge Nathan R. Margold asked the defendant: "What did the sign say?" "Well," replied the offender, "it just said 'Reserved for the Secretary of War.'"

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Editor's note: Each Saturday the Federal Diary is turned over to Federal workers for their views and comments. Mail contributions to the Federal Diary.

It is quite reasonable that every effort should be made to keep an employe within an organization—if that employe has proven efficient, capable and trustworthy in the performance of his duties.

By the same token, such a person must have ambition and a sincere desire to attain as high a position as he can attain. If there remains no further opportunity for him within his own organization he will cast about for opportunities elsewhere.

This idea alone has been one of the greater causes for the large "turnover" within every agency of the Federal Government. The Civil Service Commission has had to scour the country time and again in an attempt to obtain personnel for Washington offices. In October alone the War Department hired 6000 new employes. We weren't told how many they lost in the same period.

As a suggestion, it might be well if a check were made to find out how many of these people would have remained here if they could have received better salaries and had had more opportunities for the advancement which they were able to attain only through leaving.

Most of us realize that we are in positions similar to that of the doctor with a single patient. When the patient recovers, the doctor is out of a job. Many thousands of us have the single purpose of working ourselves out of our jobs by doing what we can to help in the winning of the war. Not one of us would have it prolonged even though we have benefited from it and shall continue benefiting from it as long as it lasts. We do not believe, however, that we should remain static, refusing to recognize that there are positions in other organizations which are equal to or even more pertinent to the war effort, and which in turn offer us better opportunities for advancement or better salaries, or both.

Industry has realized that the cost of living has been greatly increased, and it has met that situation by increasing wages and bettering conditions for its employes. This hasn't been so with the Government, however. The average low-paid civilian receives a salary identical to that of a clerk in a similar position during peacetimes. With the burden of increased costs of essential foods, rent and clothing, the staggering amount which has been added through taxes, and added nine hours per week to the work schedule and having to work on all holidays other than Christmas; it means that we are working for $800 to $1000 less a year than did our peacetime predecessors, though they received the same salaries.

Congress investigates. Congress fumes and says we have too many employes; that there is too much "thumb twiddling," wasted effort and general all-round inefficiency. We recognize this fact. Would that we had the power to do something about it! That power will come only when Congress itself, the Civil Service Commission and our various departments can realize that one person who has proven his (or her) capability and efficiency is worth more to an organization than any number of unproven and untrained people, and that every honest effort should be made to keep this one person. Under the present system the War Department has functioned as little more than a training, teaching and proving center for its typists, clerks and stenographers. When they've become of value to the department they're on their way elsewhere.—J. T. C.

This is to advise you that the panic among Interior Department stenographers over the recent paper saving ultimatum is under control. For a time it looked as though it might develop into a stampede, but I am happy to report that order has been restored with only one fat bureau head missing. It's just possible that he is stuck under one of the desks, where sooner or later the cleaners will find him. Meanwhile, his annual leave is running out on him.

A final checkup of casualties reveals that between 35 and 40 fingernails were broken or chewed off by enraged typists, and that there were several cases of sore throat among those who told each other what they thought of Secretary Ickes.

Although at the last meeting resolutions were passed giving Secretary Ickes hell for telling them how to write letters, it is now believed that they are resigned to the fact that he is the head of the department. Thanks for letting me waste your paper.

—Amy Sonandy.

I'm a $1440 clerk. I've been asked to contribute to this and that fund. To these solicitors I merely hand a copy of my monthly statement which is as follows: Room and board, $45; lunch, $9; transportation, $5; bond deduction, $12; retirement, $6; life insurance, $3; amusements, $5; general upkeep, $3; income tax (1943), $10; Victory Tax (1943), $6; note to bank, $10; note to doctor and dentist for past bills, $5. TOTAL, $119. SALARY, $120. REMAINDER, $1.

Items this dollar must cover: chewing gum, an old standby for women entertaining visitors, I try to freeze them out; cosmetics, raspberry juice for rouge doesn't work; poverty-stricken relatives, I'm well supplied; medicine, thank goodness, I'm disgustingly healthy; gifts, Christmas and birthdays will come around; contributions, sometimes one does go to church, and headache powders, from trying to stretch this dollar.—D. F. M.

Chancing to be one of the Government's stenographers who formerly worked in private industry for ten years, two years in the employ of the Federal Government has been a revelation in many ways. The most impressive reaction of such an employe is the vastness of the Government's work—no other organization in the world is comparable. Consequently, picayune criticism or complaints, when balanced against the magnitude of the Government's aims and objectives, seem trivial.

It is agreed that there are many ills to be corrected in Government organization and operation for the benefit and betterment of its employes. However, it appears, at least to this observer, that many who find fault are at fault. Their attitude toward the job to be done is often careless and automatic, so enwrapped are they in their continual cries of injustive. And so the work is done haphazardly, if at all, while they continue, martyr-like, to carry on—but unwillingly.

To this writer, who has found a greater opportunity to work, advance and be of some real service in the last two years than in the ten previous years, the good and bad phases of our Government have become understandable to some degree. It is far from infallible, but compared to the state of the rest of the world, especially at this time, our Government is undeniably one of the few worth working for and living under.

By the same token, we who are its employes are the ones who should endeavor to understand it better than any other group. Perhaps in so doing, our strength as a group would increase to a point where personal grievances would be given more consideration. Impossible? Not now, for nothing is impossible in this Government's relation to the people who comprise it. But most certainly our strength would not increase by means of such a union as suggested in last Saturday's "Federal Diary," headed by a Petrillo. The well-worn advice that in looking about us we might become more satisfied with our own lot applies to many of us but does not necessarily entail bowing our heads in submission. Let us, by all means, raise our voices—but intelligently so. One could, of course, write a very lengthy treatise on ways and means, but suffice for this ordinary Government worker to say that intelligent action represents the quintessence of all human endeavor toward advancement, and achievement.—F. K. G.

Clock Accidentally Joins Scrap Drive

TIME WAS—NOT WASTED—This clock, a landmark in Georgetown for many years, became an addition to the District scrap metal drive yesterday when it was knocked down by a trailer-truck. The vehicle, parked on Wisconsin Avenue, just north of M Street Northwest, slipped its brakes and hit the large timepiece

Runaway Truck Smashes Historic Georgetown Clock

Georgetown's landmark for almost 50 years, the huge iron clock at Wisconsin Avenue and M Street Northwest, was inadvertently reduced to scrapmetal—by a large transport truck—yesterday.

Erected for the benefit of customers by the old Potomac Savings Bank, the clock was struck by a runaway truck and demolished. District refuse trucks carted away many of the pieces.

Police said the truck, owned by the Overnight Transportation Co., was parked unattended on the west side of Wisconsin Avenue, heading south toward M Street, when its brakes gave way. It plunged over the curbstone and tore down the clock before stopping.

William Robinson, Negro, 34, of 1402 Sixth Street Northwest, forfeited $15 collateral at the Seventh Precinct station on a charge of failing to set his hand brake.

At a cost of about $1200, the clock was erected shortly before 1900 by the Potomac Bank. When this bank consolidated with the Hamilton National following the "bank holiday," the timepiece was acquired by B. A. Bowles, Georgetown real estate operator with other assets of the banking firm. Bowles was vice president of the Potomac Bank.

Since that time, he has maintained it and once tried to sell it to a downtown bank. He was blocked in this attempt by the city, according to his brother, Norman Bowles, of Takoma Park.

Union Council Indorses End Of 8-Hour Day

The House District Committee reported favorably yesterday on the bill allowing women employes here to work more than eight hours a day or 48 hours a week for the duration and six months thereafter.

Under the act, the Minimum Wage and Industrial Safety Board of the District has authority to grant employers temporary permits enabling them to employ women for greater lengths of time if the work is necessary under the present war exigencies.

The legislation is aimed at lifting during the emergency the arbitrary ban on women workers' hours, which has been found to seriously hamper the taking over of men's jobs by women.

Earlier in the day, the Maryland and District of Columbia Industrial Union Council gave conditional indorsement to the bill.

Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the council, forwarded the C. I. O.'s decision on the bill to Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee in a memorandum. The memo stated that "in the interest of the urgent requirements of the war program," the limitation on working hours for women could be removed.

Four Conditions Asked

They added four conditions to their indorsement, however, which they asked be incorporated into the legislation as a safeguard. These would specify:

1. That the urgency of the job must be certified by a three-man labor committee, to be named by the Minimum Wage Board.

2. That the urgency of the job must be certified by an appropriate Federal agency, and proper health safeguards be maintained.

3. That time-and-a-half pay be guaranteed for all work in excess of eight hours daily.

4. That the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice be given supervisory powers.

Robber Gets $200, Locks Up Porter, Store Owner

After locking the proprietor and a delivery boy in a washroom, an armed Negro yesterday escaped with about $200 from the Le Droit Liquor Store, 501 Florida Avenue Northwest.

David Slackman, the store's owner, and Lewis Baker, porter, were in the shop about 3 p. m. when the bandit entered. He asked for a quart of whisky, one that was on a back shelf, and when Slackman went to get it, produced a gun.

"All right, both of you get into the back," Slackman quoted the man. Brandishing the weapon, a .38-caliber revolver, the intruder then locked both men into a lavatory.

Slackman managed to get free after breaking a window and found that his cash register had been rifled. He said he thought the gunman got about $200.

Fairlington Project Size Cut by Third

The size of Fairlington, Defense Homes Corporation's huge housing project on Seminary Road in Arlington, Va., was reduced by almost one-third yesterday.

Commissioner Herbert Emmerich, of the Federal Public Housing Authority, said the construction of 1250 homes in the 3460-unit project had been deferred "because this is not the time to go ahead with construction of the high standards planned for Fairlington."

The same amount of materials which would have been used in building the remaining units, Emmerich said, can be used in constructing a considerably larger amount of war housing built to the standards now required by the War Production Board. He said that Fairlington had been planned and begun before the general shortage of building materials set in.

First homes of the project—designed for defense workers in the higher pay brackets—will be completed in January when about 400 of the two-story units will be opened for rental. The remainder are expected to be finished early in the spring.

Although many Government workers have been casting envious glances at the homes now abuilding, none can claim personal loss in the decision to defer construction of 1250 units inasmuch as no commitments have been made for their rental, it was stated.

Leahy Lauds Work of D.C. Draft Office

Paid Personnel Doubles, Volunteer Workers Triple in 2 Years of Action

The District's Selective Service system has done "a fine job," in the opinion of Director William E. Leahy, who called attention to the records of local boards yesterday on the second anniversary of the initial induction of Washington men.

During the two years of the Selective Service here the District's paid personnel has nearly doubled, while the volunteer personnel has almost tripled.

The draft call for the month of November, 1940, was for 51 men. More than that number are inducted daily in the District now. Out of the 51 men called first two years ago, 32 were called on November 27, of whom 27 were accepted and on November 28 19 were called and 14 accepted.

Two years ago, Leahy said, there were 327 volunteers serving the District Selective Service System. Now there are more than 1000.

Leahy asserted that the Selective Service system and the District of Columbia owed these volunteers "a debt of gratitude for the fine and unselfish service which they have rendered so efficiently throughout the last two years." Continuing, he said:

"They have shown a fine example of true American patriotism and unselfish devotion to the country and their fellow Americans. I want them to know how deeply I appreciate what they have done and are still doing, and each and every one of them has my sincerest thanks."

Among those who serve the Setive Service system without compensation are 125 members of 25 local boards; 75 appeal agents, 36 nurses, 12 hospital technicians, 75 American Legionnaires, 10 other volunteers, 26 AWVS members, 18 auxiliary policemen, and many local doctors.

Leahy did not refer to the matter, but it is known that although he is entitled to a salary of $3800 a year, he refuses to accept it and serves without compensation.

Two years ago there were 100 members of the paid personnel. The number has now grown to 199.

Farm Equipment To Be Released

Secretary of Agriculture Wickard issued an order yesterday releasing farm machinery and equipment held by dealers to permit such supplies to be rationed among farmers by county farm rationing committees.

The order continues the freeze on machinery and equipment in the hands of distributors and manufacturers until county rationing quotas are established and a system of distribution is set up.

War College Volunteers Get Red Cross First-Aid Charter

The War College volunteer first-aid detachment was awarded its Red Cross first aid charter yesterday, becoming the first military post to form a volunteer first aid unit.

The presentation was made by J. W. Gates, director of instruction for District Red Cross aid. Maj. G. H. Arnold, War College medical director, praised the enlisted men among the charter members, who gave their spare time to take the course.

In accepting the charter, Col. Thomas F. Bresnahan commended the women of the Red Cross Army and Navy auxiliary of the college for their work in organizing the classes. He especially praised the work of Mrs. Leslie J. McNair, wife of Lieutenant General McNair. But, Mrs. McNair insisted that all credit go to the Colonel's wife.

Merchant Marine Seamen Will Be Theater's Guests

Three volunteers for training as seamen in the Merchant Marine were guests yesterday of the Metropolitan Theater for a viewing of the current bill of "A Ship Is Born," the picture that was made in cooperation with the Maritime Commission.

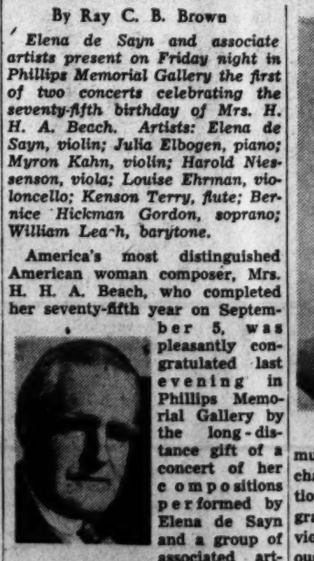
Postlude

Concert Celebrates Jubilee of Mrs. Beach

By Ray C. B. Brown

Elena de Sayn and associate artists present on Friday night in Phillips Memorial Gallery the first of two concerts celebrating the seventy-fifth birthday of Mrs. H. H. A. Beach. Artists: Elena de Sayn, violin; Julia Elbogen, piano; Myron Kahn, violin; Harold Niessenson, viola; Louise Ehrman, violoncello; Kenson Terry, flute; Bernice Hickman Gordon, soprano; William Lea-h, barytone.

America's most distinguished American woman composer, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, who completed her seventy-fifth year on September 5, was pleasantly congratulated last evening in Phillips Memorial Gallery by the long-distance gift of a concert of her compositions performed by Elena de Sayn and a group of associated artists. The diamond jubilee celebration will continue with a second concert tonight, and the dual salute is deeply appreciated by Mrs. Beach whose ill health did not allow her to come from New York for the occasion. Miss de Sayn deserves much credit for the tireless zeal with which she prepared this tribute to a woman whose long career has passed through the phases of a child prodigy at the keyboard, an acclaimed pianist in this country and abroad, and a composer honored both by the performance and the praise of her numerous works.



MRS. H. H. A. BEACH,

BROWN

It has been the lot of Mrs. Beach to be better known to the general public by one of her songs, "The Year's at the Spring," than by her important compositions, such as her "Gaelic" symphony and her two piano concertos. The two concerts arranged by Miss De Sayn help to remedy this by acquainting local music-lovers with some of the chamber music works and a selection of songs. Last evening's program began with the sonata for violin and piano, Op. 34, a melodious and grateful work charged with poesy and exalted emotional feeling.

First local performances were given of the theme and variations for flute and strings and the piano variations on Balkan themes. The former was written for the Chamber Music Society of San Francisco, and I recall vividly the premiere in that city with Elias Hecht as the flautist. It is a work of imagination in content and of ingenuity in structure, a rather elegiac theme being treated in moods of nostalgic meditation, gayety, romantic sentiment and humor. The alternation of moods has a charming effect, as the theme is varied to the purposes of an extended reverie. The set of piano variations, on the other hand, is a more deliberate display piece, technically exacting, brilliant and highly stylized.

A half dozen of the songs were revelatory of Mrs. Beach's lyric gift and of her fine taste in the relation between the voice and the piano. William Leach sang "Across the World," "My Star" and "The Wandering Knight" and added as an extra number an interesting spiritual "On a Hill," which imparts a Puritan tinge to the religious improvisation of the Negro. Bernice Rickman Gordon offered the atmospheric "Stella Viatoris" and two other songs, "Mirage" and "Rendezvous."

Other American composers had an inning yesterday when the Friday Morning Music Club met in Barker Hall for the first concert of its fifty-seventh season. The program was a two-piano recital by Margaret Tolson and Fanny Ross Henbest, with an interlude of songs by Mary Apple. Miss Tolson's predilection for contemporary music is well known, and it was no surprise that she arranged a program of novelties. Her collaborator, Mrs. Henbest, merits commendation for the admirable adaptability with which she substituted on short notice for Constance Russell.

First on the program was a work by the resident composer, Parker Bailey, an effective and neatly contrived prelude and fugue on Bach's chorale, "Sleepers, Wake," and at the end came the first performance anywhere of a concertino by Rose Lee Finney, 36-year-old professor of music at Smith College. This proved to be thoroughly delightful in its humor, wit and modernistic coloring. Mr. Finney paid a few ironic compliments to Paul Hindemith in the first movement and in the last a smiling salute to jazz.

Hindemith himself was represented by his sonata for piano four-hands, a clever work in his characteristic manner of pleasant-sounding atonality, practical sentiment and robust humor. The remaining two-piano items were "Brazileira," by Darius Milhaud, which was repeated by request, and two pieces by Robert Casadesus, "Russe," which resembled a bit of Stravinski's "Petrushka," and "Sicilenne."

Accompanied by Claude Robeson, Mary Apple sang engagingly a group of songs by Donaudy, Widor, Pittaluga, Dunhill, Stratton and Harriet Ware.

Steering Committee Knocks Out Measure; Resolution Seen to Extend Present Plan

The Democratic steering committee of the Senate yesterday pigeonholed the Federal overtime pay bill for the remainder of the current congressional session, ending all hope for its enactment before 1943.

In its place, the committee authorized the Senate Civil Service Committee to prepare a joint resolution extending overtime pay arrangements until June 30, 1943—the close of the present fiscal year.

The decision will leave the Civil Service Committee with a rush job on its hands, for the bulk of the present overtime laws are due to expire at midnight Monday. They have already been extended twice by congressional resolution since last June, waiting on the expected passage of the overtime bill, which did not materialize.

Senator Mead (Democrat) of New York, acting Civil Service chairman, indicated that an effort would be made to meet the deadline—otherwise, the statutes which now give overtime pay to some half-million white collar workers will lapse. Most of those affected are in the War and Navy Departments' field services.

No More "Hot" Legislation

The shelving of the overtime bill, which would have guaranteed overtime or a 10 per cent raise to all Federal employes, resulted from the steering committee's dictum that no more controversial legislation should be brought before the present lame-duck Senate. Moreover, Majority Leader Barkley pointed out that it would be futile to try and push through a bill without assurances that it would also receive House approval before January 3.

This ban on controversial matters, coupled with the indorsement of an extending resolution, indicated that there would be no serious opposition to permitting the existing system to remain in effect.

Under present law, about 58 per cent of the Federal service is paid for its extra work, but most of the Washington employes are included in the remaining 42 per cent who get no extra compensation. Not all of those who are now paid overtime would be affected, however, if the Senate fails to meet the Monday deadline, for the pay scales of such categories as arsenal and shipyard workers are set by the War Labor Board rather than Congress.

Demise Foreseen

The death of the new overtime bill, as far as the Seventy-seventh Congress is concerned, had been foretold in the past few weeks by mounting opposition and by a threat that it would be used as a springboard for a fight against the 40-hour law in private industry.

The legislation sought to fix a minimum 48-hour work week in all branches of the Government service, with time-and-a-half pay for all work over 40 hours. A ceiling would have been placed on the amount of overtime which could be earned, but all salary brackets would have been entitled to it. For those whose jobs would not be adaptable to extra hours, the bill gave a flat 10 per cent annual raise.

District school teachers were also slated for a 10 per cent bonus under the deceased measure's provisions.

The steering committee made only one concession: it suggested that the Civil Service group continue to meet on the Federal pay problem and call to the attention of Congress any "glaring inequities" in pay scales which might be uncovered.

Ballou Urges Pay Raise for D. C. Teachers

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, yesterday urged District Commissioners to support proposed legislation which would provide 10 per cent salary increases (up to $300 annually) for teachers and other school employes.

Although the Commissioners made no specific reply to Dr. Ballou, they did instruct Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler and Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech to prepare data which would show the effect of the Mead overtime pay bill on the District government.

The Mead measure, which would increase the Government work-week to 44 hours instead of the current 40, with 10 per cent pay increases up to $300, has been broadened to include the teachers, as to pay, although their working hours have not been increased as have those of thousands of Government employes.

Fowler recently told the Commissioners that such an increase for the teachers would be, in effect, a "bonus," and, if granted, in justice should be passed out to District firemen and policemen also. The total cost to the District in pay increase to all three groups, he said, would be in the neighborhood of three million dollars.

Congressmen Sore At Locked Doors Of House Building

The guards who watch the locked side doors of House Office Building early of mornings, sit within where it's warm and cozy and point their fingers toward the front doors which are open all the time.

This makes Representatives very angry. That is, they become very angry when it is they themselves who are routed toward the front doors, which are some distance away.

Some walk from side doors to front doors, muttering thoughts political.

"Pouring rain or not, I have to walk around the block," observed Representative Charles A. Plumley (Republican) of Vermont yesterday. "Who appointed those guards? I wouldn't know. I haven't got any patronage."

Remember Hints On Illumination

If you're "light"-minded these days, remember these hints on illumination of your home:

Every chair or davenport used for reading or sewing should have its own lamp. No purloining of Pop's reading light from beside his chair when you want to darn Johnny's socks!

The height of a reading lamp is important, too. A floor lamp 58 inches from the floor to the top of the shade, a table lamp 24 inches from the base to the top of the shade, is satisfactory. All lamps should be placed so that the unshaded bulb is never exposed to the eye. No light bulb should be without a shade.

How to Work Hard and Keep Fit: Relax When Day's Work Is Done

You'd have to go some to beat this record for work: Six days a week, with a lot of Saturday nights thrown in, and usually some little chore to do on Sunday.

That is the schedule Janet Blair, Columbia Pictures find, has been following for more than a year and it hasn't affected her health or looks. The reason is, she couldn't be in better condition if she were in training to be a WAAC or a WAVE.

Janet is a beauty with brains and she found out early in the game that "the big thing in working hard is to be able to relax afterwards. But you can't relax your body until you relax your mind. What solves the problem for me is a good stiff walk. When I come home from the studio all tied up in knots, I go for a walk. It doesn't matter what the time is—and often it is around midnight.

"I believe that when a person is bothered or worried about anything, the best way in the world to shake it off is to walk, or run! Get out and act like a kid and it will ease the strain. I like to sing as I step along."

She thinks nothing of a 30-block jaunt and her friends say they can't keep up with her, that what she calls a walk is more of a run. Anyway, she comes home relaxed.

Janet is like you are about exercise. She would rather ride horseback, play tennis or swim. But what working girl gets the chance to do those steadily? So, she depends on a set of calisthenics. They are simple but keep her so supple that I am convinced not very many of you do them regularly.

The one she calls "cracking my back" is just the old exercise of standing erect with feet well apart, hips held still, arms flung out at sides shoulder-level. But when Janet does it, she holds her hips statue-still, and whirls so far to either side from the waist up that you can hear her vertebrae sound off like corn popping. That is part of her stretching routine. She goes through it every morning. Considering she gets up at 4:30 a. m., you can believe she means it when she says "it feels so good to stretch that once you get into the habit you wouldn't think of skipping it any more than you'd skip brushing your teeth." Whereupon, she got up and went through a few more stretches, such as side-bends and trunk rotation.

Of course, her figure is perfect! She has a bust measurement of 34 inches, a waistline that is only 24½ inches, and hips a sheer 34½ inches. She is 5 feet 4 inches tall, and except for the loss of seven pounds dancing in "Something to Shout About," her weight stays at 110 pounds. She doesn't diet. She eats according to good nutrition, with plenty of milk and liver in the day's menu.

To look at Janet Blair, promising Columbia starlet, you'd never think she knew about hard work. You'll be astonished at the week she puts in. How can she smile like this? It's her fitness program, given today in Ida Jean Kain's column

Hand-Me-Down

If you ask Rosalind Russell how she keeps her hands so soft and smooth, especially on a set as rough and ready as the one she is working on for her aviation picture, "Flight For Freedom," at RKO Radio, her answer is simple. She uses a hand lotion that is based upon a formula her mother got from her mother—one part lemon juice, one part of glycerine and one part of rose water.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

Hygiene in War Emergency Demands Care of Children

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

The present emergency has caused a dislocation in American life and social customs so profound and so far-reaching as to cause a great deal of genuine alarm because it is feared that great groups of our population which are now being affected will feel the results long after the war is over.

Dr. Clendening

For instance, a mother and father are both employed in war industry and both work on a night shift. They leave one or two or more small children alone in a house or an apartment or a room by themselves. The mother and father come home tired and often a child only 4 or 5 years of age is left to shift for itself for breakfast. Social service workers made an inspection of locked cars around a certain munitions works at night and found something like 25 babies, all lying asleep in the back seats of cars.

Day Nurseries

It hardly needs any one with technical training to point out that this is all wrong. If proper provision cannot be made for such children, one member of the family should give up work and stay home with them. In many cities, the civic authorities have provided nurseries for these "war orphans."

My own institution has created a day nursery for the children of married nurses and social service workers who have had to return to duty on account of the drafting of the unmarried ones. There is no use winning the war if we lose all of our civilization and all of the next generation in the effort. Even if it slows up the war effort, the babies have to be taken care of.

Another similar problem is the child of grade school or high school age whose parents are both off working and who is given a key to the home. These are called in my community "The Door Key Kids." They get in the house or apartment in groups of mixed ages and sexes and plenty of things happen. This is the responsibility of the parents, together with the school authorities and also with the industrial plants—to see that the children of such an age are not given license which is beyond their powers of restraint to deal with.

The breakfast problem for the child, or children, who are left alone by parents who are both engaged in work is one that has cropped up intermittently in the last two decades. It often leads to very serious nutritional deficiencies. During the days of depression and unemployment, curiously, but obviously enough, it was not as much of a problem as it is in these days of comparative prosperity. Which is quite a price to pay for prosperity.

I feel that all manufacturing plants which employ women workers have the obligation of furnishing nurseries for both day and night shifts presided over by a responsible attendant. Certainly the women war workers can have a reasonable right to expect that their children will be fed and watched over and attended while they are doing war work for their country.

For the Fair Minded

By Martha Ellyn

The "man in your life" may be a captain in the air force; a marine at Quantico; an officer-candidate at training school, or doing a top-notch job on the home front. Wherever he is, at camp, shipyard, airplane factory, training base, or in a Washington office, that ever-so-important, "For Him," Christmas gift must be chosen with special care this year. His gift must fit into his new life, must be practical, durable, essential. No room for frills this second Christmas-after-Pearl Harbor.

Have you considered toiletries for men? Here are some practical, thrifty without cheapness, suggestions for gifts of this type:

Available locally is an attractive gift set containing talc, men's cologne and shaving lotion—all scented with a blend reminiscent of the highlands, with a touch of heather and Scotch fern. The sturdy stoneware jugs with their snug brown caps make handsome containers for these quality toiletries, made exclusively for men. The same manufacturer also offers a shaving ensemble, called the Commodore Kit, presented in a tweed-like case containing stone bottle filled with shaving lotion and cologne, as well as a cylinder of talc. The price is $3.

Nothing can convince a man that shaving can be fun. But there's a new shaving soap that will go a long way toward taking the sting out of it. The duck-shaped Decoy shaving bowl it comes in looks natural enough to fool even a live duck. Made of glazed pottery, handsomely covered, it is proportioned to fit a bathroom shelf or cabinet. It holds a generous supply of soap, and refills are available. The soap itself is especially bland and lathery type, slightly scented with a fresh outdoor fragrance. It's also a wonderful beard-softener that leaves the skin feeling cool, clean and comfortable. This is a gift that a really particular man will appreciate.

To make a morning-grumpy husband a pleasant breakfast companion, you might give him the economically-priced, spicy-scented soap refill a well-known toiletry company has brought out for their shave mug. The mug is a pottery container with simple decorations of sailing vessels of the early American days. One cake of this soap will last the average man for nine months—and it costs only 65 cents. If he doesn't already own the mug, it can be bought, filled with soap, for $1.

A set containing a wooden shaving bowl with matching container of after-shave powder, a flacon of after-shave lotion and a flacon of cologne may also ease his shaving problems. The sets are handsomely finished in a natural wood grain cover paper with boxes crested, beveled and lined with a gold-tone paper. The set features the new priority-inspired wooden containers. The price is $3.80.

For information concerning these shaving items appropriate for men's Christmas gifts, call NAtional 4200, Extension 324.

FOOT-LOOSE AND FANCY-FREE

By Jeanne Contini

Limitation Order M 217 issued recently by OPA is where you put your foot in the war effort. Its purpose is to conserve the best leather available for shoeing our fighting forces by restricting the amount put to civilian use. Naturally certain changes of style are indicated.

By spring you will be seeing no more new:

Colored shoes—reds, greens, purples, etc. Six basic colors are allowed: black, navy, white, and three shades of brown.

Two-tone shoes, or multi-color combinations. (Kiss of death to brown and white spectator sports, and saddle oxfords, backbone, or rather metatarsal, of every campus in the U. S. A.)

Contrast stitchings, bows, or leather-on-leather decorations.

Mud-guards extending beyond the fore part of the shoes.

Collars circling the top of the shoes.

Full-breasted heels (an engaging trade name for that wasted 2 inches of leather which made possible the curve at the angle where heel meets sole).

In the process of shedding nail-heads, wing-tips and rainbows, the new shoes are coming from the bench clean in line and graceful. We're afraid we stand to benefit again. The new models we've seen are anything but drab, and are a distinct improvement over the old. The excess decorations often hid poor workmanship. Craft and quality now shine through.

Generally you will see:

Lower heels . . . for more and better mileage under foot. These will appear in everything from evening to playshoes.

Ankle-straps and lacings . . . to dress up and give grace to low-heeled shoes.

Exciting soles . . . of noncritical material to substitute leather. These may be plastic, rope, wood, carpeting, lace, etc. Personally, we're standing by ready to roll up the rugs and take down the curtains at a moments notice.

We've pictured three outlaws next to their legal counterparts to prove that from an esthetic point of view M 217 is pure clover. The new ones can be had at a local store and if you'll call National 4200, extension 324, between 9 and 5 we will be glad to tell you which one.

Proper Diet From Birth Is Important for Good Teeth

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Most of us have certain ideas about teeth which are kept active by constant repetition from all sources. One of these is that the calcium of the mother's teeth is drawn upon by the developing fetus if her own diet is lacking in minerals.

A clipping from the April, 1940, issue of Northwest Dentistry carrying the reprint of an article by the late Dr. Rudolf Kronfeld was brought to my attention when I unwittingly made just the above statement. The refutation of that idea is pretty definitely stated. But let me quote it.

"In scientific literature the statement is frequently encountered that 'bones and teeth are storehouses of calcium which may be withdrawn.' This statement is correct as far as bones are concerned but incorrect with regard to teeth. Calcium from bones can be mobilized . . . but no such mobilization of calcium from the teeth can be demonstrated. On the contrary all experimental evidence indicates that the calcium content of the teeth is very stable. There is probably a slight physiological increase in the calcium content of dentin throughout life; for the enamel no alteration of calcium content has ever been demonstrated.

"There is no conclusive evidence that the incidence of tooth decay during pregnancy is greater than the incidence for non-pregnant women of corresponding age. A possible increase would have to be explained by such factors as lack of care, gingivitis, vomiting, increased intake of carbohydrates; there is no evidence of withdrawal of calcium from the mother's teeth.

"The important period for the structure and composition of the enamel of the permanent teeth is from birth to the age of 5 or 6 years. Especially significant with respect to the first permanent molars (which come in at age of 6 years or thereabouts) are the first two years of life. During this formative period a diet well fortified in the necessary building elements is essential to strong, well built teeth. The best natural source of calcium is milk. Vitamin D, which is necessary to the proper assimilation of calcium by the body, is found in milk, butter, egg yolk, cod liver oil and other fats; if necessary it can be supplemented in the form of Vitamin D concentrates.

"Once the teeth have erupted they have just as good or as bad a structure as they are going to have for the rest of their life."

This is interesting and novel, since the previous statement that the fetus draws on its mother's teeth for its own supplies of calcium if they be lacking in the diet, is one which has been made repeatedly. There is an "out" in the phrase, "has ever been demonstrated," which leaves one with the feeling that at some future time such a condition might be capable of demonstration.

Our leaflet, "Teeth," explains the ages and order in which both first and second teeth are to be expected. It may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Michael's Girl

By Sophie Kerr

Chapter 44

HE said nothing of these to Van at dinner and in the train home, but talked about the mysterious secret of Tench and Michael and Elin. Van could add nothing, only repeated that Tench had come unexpectedly at Christmas and talked with Elin, then with Michael after the party. He had come again, with seeming urgence, and again.

"Of course, he's nuts about Jean," said Van, "but that's not why he comes. It's something else, or why should Michael be in it?"

The Jean angle was news to Philip. "Does Jean like him?" asked Philip with curiosity.

"Oh, she likes him well enough, I guess. It's funny—he's so old, but I think they'll probably get married before long."

Philip could not say to Van that Tench had been in love with Elin. Instead he asked, "Does your mother like the idea of Jean marrying him?"

"She's strong for it; it's the one thing she's happy about. Granny likes it, too."

"But you think he's too old for her?"

"He's got gray hair over his ears and lots of wrinkles. Of course . . . he's nice . . . and lots of fun."

Philip hid a smile at the unconscious, youthful patronage. He was finding it so good to be with Van and to warm himself in Van's affection and confidence that he almost forgot his misgivings over what he had set out to do. Elin might very well repudiate him, finally refuse even to see him, though she must have spared Van from knowing her grievances against him; it would be like her to do that. Elin was, Elin had always been, a hard person to live up to. She is too good; she hasn't any big faults or even small ones, he thought, but if she'll forgive me once more I'll try . . . I'll really try this time . . . and if she's ill . . . He stopped there, unable to face that dread.

Letty was waiting for them at the entrance gates. Even in the late dusk Philip noticed how tall she was and her vitality. Her decision colored her voice.

Was Worried

"I'm thankful you've come," she said. "Van and I were worried." She walked at his side quietly like a woman grown. "I'm glad to see you," she added.

"It makes me feel like Metuselah to have you and Van so grown up," said Philip.

"That's what Father says all the time. Father's acting very strangely—did Van tell you? He doesn't laugh and joke any more, he doesn't eat properly, he doesn't sleep—why, he gets up at night and goes out and walks and walks. He'll be sick if this keeps on." As they came to the cottage path she stopped. "I won't go any farther. Good night, Mr. Bryant. Good night, Van."

"I'll be seeing you," said Van as her white dress glimmered away.

The house was before them square and high and dark except for the hall windows. The night was quiet, too, and gratefully fresh and sweet to Phillip after the city's stale heat. "I'm downright nervous," he said, as Van felt for his key.

"You oughtn't to be," said the boy simply. "It's your home."

They went slowly up the stairs into the great hall and Philip's heart bumped his throat. Time turned back for him—he remembered evenings long ago when he had come up those same steps and found his father reading, his mother with her needlework in the pool of soft lamplight beside the table. He would hardly have been surprised to see them there, the memory was so lucid. But there was no one; the pool of light was empty. "Granny and Jean have gone upstairs, I guess, and Muthy's probably out on the terrace. I'll call her," said Van.

"It's not Van. It's Philip."

"Philip!" She stood up quickly, but did not come to meet him, and he stopped, waiting, uncertain.

"Elin, Van asked me to come. He seemed to think I could do something, that you were in some sort of difficulty——"

"You didn't come because you wanted to." It was not a question; she said it dully, as if she knew he wouldn't want to come. But she walked toward him and he laid his hand over hers.

"Elin, you're skin and bone! You must be sick! Van said you weren't well—don't be afraid, I won't distress you—I won't stay—I only want to find out if there's anything I can do."

She moved away. "Anything you can do about what?"

Wanted to Come

He started to answer calmly, but other words came fast, eager, pleading. "Oh, Elin, darling, I did want to come. I wanted to see you more than I can tell you, though I was afraid you wouldn't even speak to me—I don't deserve you should, God knows! I'm all right again, Elin. I'm getting somewhere with my job. I can take care of you now—oh, not the way we used to live, but not scraping and pinching and you working and all that. But I'm on my feet—I'm back in my right senses and I want to come home—and be with you—more than I ever wanted anything in my life."

Elin was silent. At last she said, as if to herself, "I don't believe it. I don't believe it's real. I waited so long, I hoped . . . and I'd given up; I thought it was no use to hope any longer.

"But it is true, Elin."

They stood in the darkness, in silence. Finally Philip spoke again. "I knew you'd not like my coming; I told Van so. I told him I was ashamed to come—but he insisted. He's been worrying his head off about you, Elin. He says Tench started it and you and Michael are involved somehow. He was so determined—I couldn't turn him down flat, but if you don't even want to talk to me I'll go and not trouble you any more. I didn't expect you to forgive me. I know you despise me."

"I don't despise you," said Elin, slowly. "You can't help being what you are and I can't help being what I am. If I'd been gay and bright and loved diamond bracelets up to my elbows and—oh, you didn't mind at first; we had a wonderful life at first, Philip, you know we did. Until you went daft about making money. Even now—you come here and say you're all right, you're earning enough to take care of me. So it's money again. I don't know—it seems as if you'd been poisoned."

"It's not poison to want to provide for you, Elin. I did go off my head: I wanted everything—I was so sure that I'd have everything! Then the crash hit me and I was knocked out—and when I got better there was nothing left, not even a chance to work—there was nothing! Some men have to be hit over the head before they come to their senses. I'm like that, I suppose. But now when I look at old Derbock and watch him scheming and plotting and finagling about money, when he's simply plastered with it already and he so old and feeble and alone—it scares me, Elin. It make me see what you meant to me, and my home, and Van. And when I came into the house tonight and saw it as it's been for so long, in my father's time and my grandfather's—I realized there was nothing so solid and so precious as that—that continuity from one generation to another. I knew there was nothing I wanted so much as my chance to be here, part of it—with Van—and with you. Score off the past if you can, Elin, and let it go and give me a chance for the future. Make any conditions you like—I'll live up to them—truly I will."

She had listened without motion, without sound, but now she suddenly held her thin hands out to him. "I don't care how you've come back. I'm not making any conditions or saying you must do this or that—I don't care about anything if you're here with me—even if it's only for a little while—I'm so tired—I've missed you——"

His arms were around her, his face was against hers, against her tears. "Don't cry, Elin, please don't cry—there, there, darling. Oh, Elin, I'm so sorry, I'm so ashamed——"

Get Enough Paint To Finish the Job

Take a tip from Maureen O'Hara if you have an idea of painting any rooms to pretty them up. Before she came back to RKO Radio to make "This Land Is Mine" she had her kitchen painted a bright apple green. But the painter ran out of paint before it was finished and the new batch he bought didn't match in color, although it was from the same maker.

Now Maureen insists that it is far better to buy too much paint at first, and have it around for touch-up jobs.

Chapter Night Held by Women Of Moose Unit

Varied entertainment was enjoyed by members of Columbia Chapter, 368, Women of the Moose, when they met last night for a chapter night program.

Mrs. Ida Finny, chairman of the library committee, presided, and Mrs. Jane Davis directed the ritual service. Mrs. Oakes of the Mount Pleasant Branch, Public Library, gave a book review, and Mrs. Marguerite Rossi discussed the functions of the library committees and the library of Mooseheart.

The quartet of the Daniels Glee Club of McKinley High School presented several numbers. Mrs. Helen Emligh and Rhoda Ottenberg gave readings.

Sigma Tau Dance Tonight

Sigma Tau Gamma Sorority and its friends will dance tonight at the New Colonial Hotel on Fifteenth Street to the music of the Alaskans.

A specialty tap number by Phylis and Joanne Davitt will be featured during intermission.

The committee on arrangements included Miss Helen Curtin, chairman, Miss Marjory Logan of Alpha, Miss Ann Schiel, Mrs Jerome Lipski of Beta, Miss Bernice Wiltshire, Mrs. William A. J Bryarly of Gamma, Miss Martha Jane Broadwater and Miss Dorothea Dennis of Delta.

Next on the sorority calendar will be plans for a benefit show by the sorority's four chapters, to be formulated under the guidance of the council president, Mrs. Arthur F. Swinburne.

Fit for King

Turkey a la king takes on new holiday dress when served over biscuits pepped up with sage or poultry seasoning. One-half teaspoonful of seasoning for each cup of flour—sifted with the dry ingredients for thorough blending—makes biscuit dough with just the right touch.

Mary Cannon to Study War's Effects in South America

By Genevieve Reynolds

The Post Club Editor.

How is the war affecting employment of women in the South American countries? What postwar plans are in the making? Miss Mary M. Cannon, representative of the Women's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, leaves today for Brazil to find the answers to these and other questions.

Genevieve Reynolds

Representing the State Department Interdepartmental Committee, Miss Cannon will later visit Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador. Also, she will continue work started two years ago when she visited Argentina, Uruguay and Chile.

On previous trips to South American countries Miss Cannon talked face to face with women workers in all types of jobs.

"Women in the South American countries are keenly interested in the activities of the United States women," said Miss Cannon at a press conference. "They are especially interested in the home life. You see, they have the exaggerated motion picture idea of North American women."

Brazil First

Brazilian women requested that Miss Cannon visit that country first. For they are eager to learn all about the labor conditions of women here and want direct, first hand information on all war activities participated in by the women of this country. Also, they want to know if women's pay is equal to that of the men employes.

Asked if the United States Government had any plans to bring South American workers here to aid with the war effort, Miss Cannon replied: "Already the Women's Bureau has laid the ground work for that. It hopes to bring up professional women workers (called internees) to spend some time in Washington at the Labor Department and then study labor conditions in the various States."

Miss Cannon, who hails from Winchester-Canal, Ohio, lived for 6½ years in Buenos Aires. She speaks Spanish and Portuguese fluently. An economist of the first water, she understands the problems in relation to working women both in this country and in Latin America.

In general, she thinks that it is far more important to bring the Latin Americans to this country so that they will have a better understanding of working conditions and way of life than for North Americans to visit the Latin American republics. Reason—the returning Latin's sphere of influence will be larger and more permanent than that of a North American who goes down for a short stay.

MISS MARY M. CANNON

One-Way View

Commenting on Miss Cannon's, proposed Good Neighborly trip, Miss Mary Sanderson, chief of the Women's Bureau, averred: "It is important that we in the Americas get together. We must take a broad view of the situation, not just isolated phases of life."

Then she pointed out that Miss Cannon was the first from this country to talk to the women of the Latin countries face to face about working conditions and legislation.

FAMILY FEAST

By Hazel Scalfe Detwiler

Over the river and through the Pentagon wilderness the clan came for a family gathering. In some places nine people and a cat and dog week-ending together in a house designed for four might seem like overcrowding, but not in Washington.

Cousins became acquainted for the first time and stared at one another tentatively. Either close harmony or enmity were inevitable fortunately, Donnie and Mary and this tall, new Cousin Bill decided upon mutual good will. Not so the dog and cat. Flambeau, his orange fur rising, was banished to the basement, and peace, but not quiet, descended upon the house.

Strange, that a war should bring a family together for the first time in years. Out of evil, good may come. But looking at the blue caps of the two men of the family, we raised a toast to the silver eagles and to the next meeting. The smell of turkey and sage drifted from the kitchen to mingle with the smoke of cigars and the odor of chrysanthemums. There were yellow roses on the dining table; we were very festive indeed.

Young Bill found a copy of Seabrook's "Witchcraft," and withdrew to the study to delve into strange matters. Donnie and Mary took the dog for a walk. News over the radio was good and the men were jubilant.

Basting the turkey, I felt a tap on my shoulder. It was Bill, asking for a hair newly cut from my head. I remembered Seabrook. "No hexes, young man," I said firmly, shoving the roaster back into the oven. "But this is white magic," Bill protested. He went back to find his cousins, forlorn and empty-handed.

Dinner progressed smoothly. Looking down the table, I felt that I could see millions of other homes. There were the children with drumsticks, passing plates for second helpings; the men in uniform; the small cups of carefully measured coffee with dessert; the laughter, and the stories that began with, "Do you remember?" Tomorrow would come soon enough, but today we were together.

After dinner, the cat was brought up from the basement and was given a saucer in a corner of the kitchen, where it lapped and crunched happily. The dog was not supposed to eat until night, but someone broke the rules and fed him. An hour later a wail sounded upstairs. Mary ran down the steps, eyes wide, and pigstails flying behind her. One of the animals had been sick. The boys were dispatched with paper towels and pail of water, each protesting that it must have been the other's pet. Mary sat quietly until it was over, knowing that the disaster had occurred in her room and that silence was the better part of wisdom.

The boys returned, a trifle green, but good-natured. Then they looked out of the window and saw their fathers returning from a walk with the dog at their heels. Flambeau was thus adjudged guilty and, in one horrible moment, Donnie realized that he cleaned not his own room but Mary's. And besides, the cat belonged to her. Brotherly love has its limits. "I'm hungry," he announced, and a turkey sandwich took his mind off his troubles.

Outside, the sun was low, and a coppery light came in through the west windows. A ray caught the bright scales of the goldfish, swimming placidly in his bowl. Another glittered on the rim of grandmother's glasses as she sat in the big armchair telling the children a story. The dog lay dreaming in a corner, and the cat, now forgiven lay curled at my husband's feet. Young Bill rose with a great show of being casual, and stealthily clipped a few orange hairs from Flambeau's bushy tail. Time will tell whether the magic will be black or white.

The little door over the face of the cuckoo clock opened, and the cuckoo came out and made a great to-do because it was 6 o'clock. "We're hungry," both boys said at once. We had tea and milk and sandwiches, and a bowl of shiny red apples and purple grapes.

Thanksgiving was over. Or was it?

To Remove Spots

To remove chewing gum that has hardened, soften the spot with egg white and then launder. However, if material is nonwashable, sponge with carbon tetrachloride until spot disappears.

* * * *

To remove lipstick stains, rub the spot with cold cream, lard, or butter. After a few minutes, remove excess and wash in hot water and soap. If this isn't successful, bleach with hydrogen peroxide. Rinse. If material is nonwashable, sponge with carbon tetrachloride.

Pilot Club to Meet

3 Dozen Foods Now Dehydrated

The United States Government, for its Army, Navy, and Lend-Lease, is now buying three dozen vegetables and vegetable products in dehydrated form, a recent Government report reveals. The report lists an entire "pantry shelf" of foods which, after the war, will be made available to American housewives.

Here is the list: Apples, applesauce, bananas, bean soup, beets, cabbage, carrots, celery, coffee, corn soup, cranberries, eggs, fortified soups, garlic, lemon powder, meat, milk, mixed vegetables, onions, orange powder, parsley, parsnips, pea soup, and Irish potatoes.

Also sweet potatoes, pumpkin, rutabagas, soya bean soup, spinach squash, tomatoes, tomato sauces, tomato soup, tomato juice cocktail, turnips, and vegetable soup.

Faced with the tremendous task of producing approximately one billion pounds of dehydrated foods during the next year, the dehydration industry is making a superhuman effort to broaden the scope of its activities enough to meet these demands. Almost daily new products are being added to the long list of foods which can now be satisfactorily dehydrated.

Spoon Bread

If you want to vary the flavor of spoon bread, use the following variations:

If dry skim milk in available, mix 1½ cups with the corn meal, and use all water for the liquid. All milk or diluted evaporated milk may also be used as the liquid in this recipe.

WITH CHEESE—Add ¼ pound cheese (1 cup grated) to the thickened milk mixture. Stir until it has melted. Reduce the fat to 2 tablespoons if cheese is used.

WITH SALT PORK—Add ½ cup crisp fried salt pork cut into small pieces, to the thickened milk mixture. Reduce the fat to 2 tablespoons and the salt to 1 teaspoon.

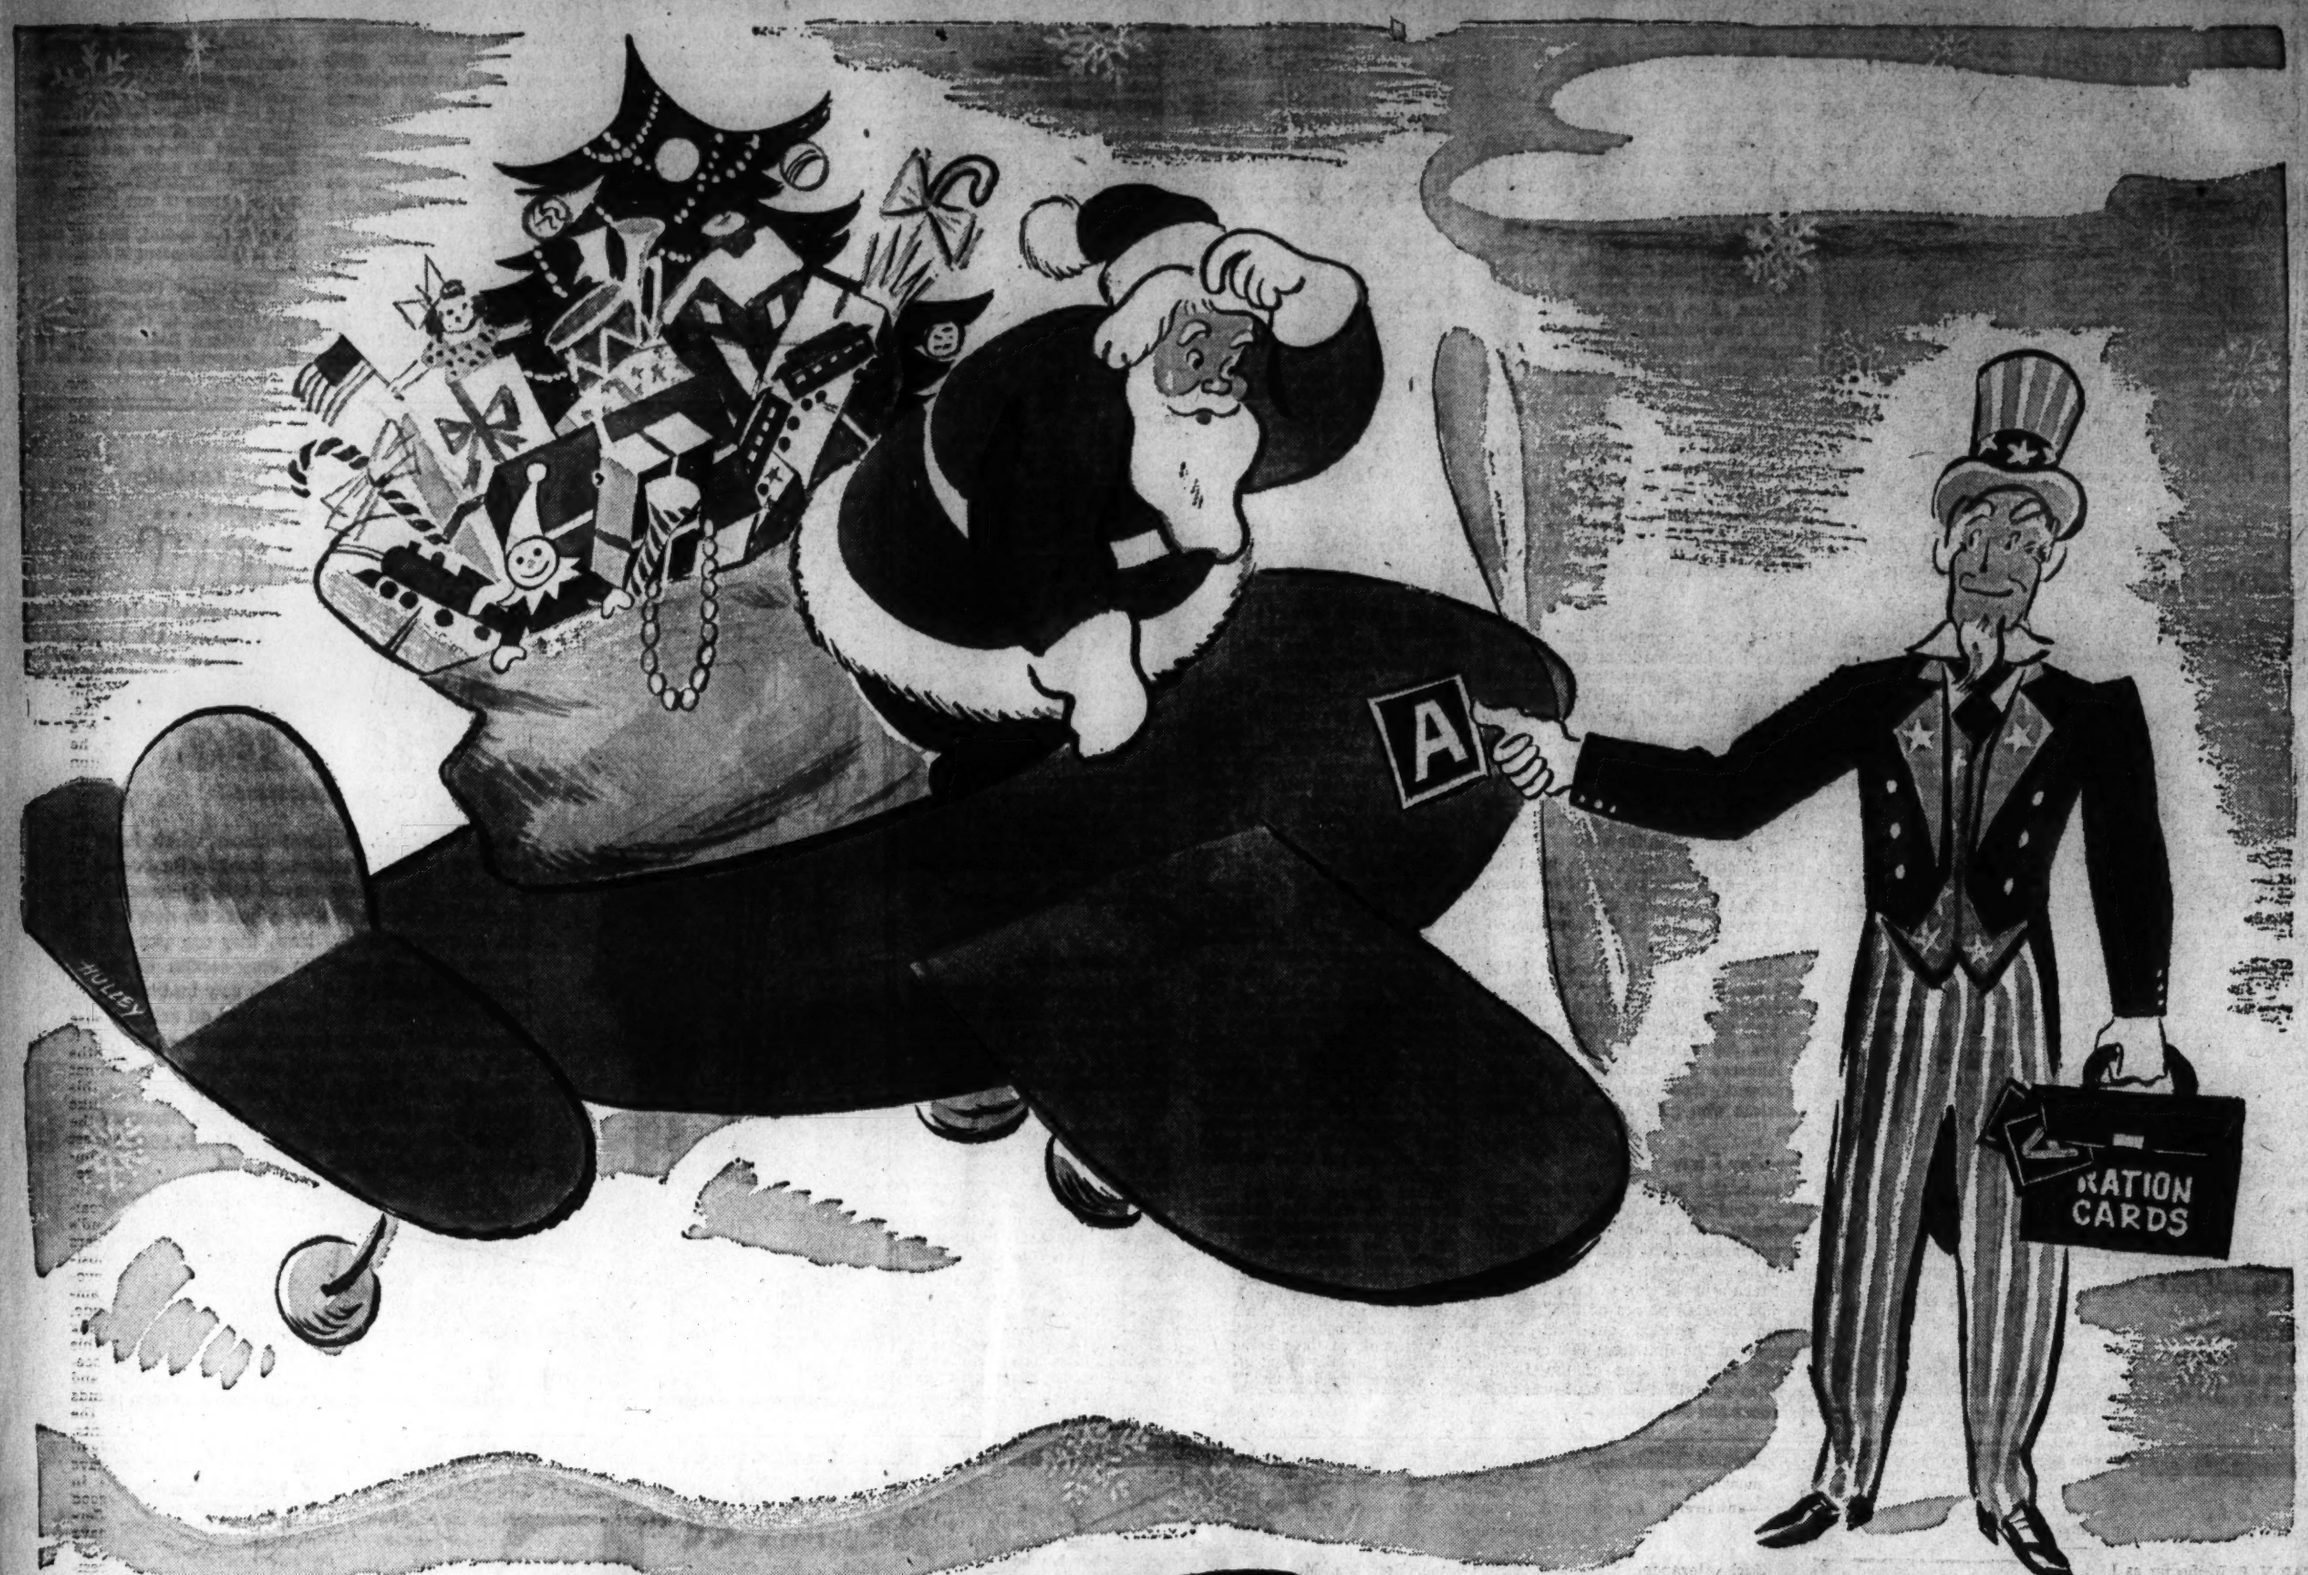
The Store of Nationally Famous Gifts. The Hecht Co.

F STREET, 7th STREET, E STREET — NATIONAL 5100



Do Your Part by Shopping Early!

Uncle Sam says "Do your Christmas shopping now."

This is an important and patriotic duty on your part. Your thoughtfulness in carrying it out becomes a real contribution to the Nation's war program and the finest Christmas gift you can give America.

By shopping early you give yourself a Christmas present too. You give yourself a saving in money, a saving in time, AND in peace of mind.

By shopping early you contribute greatly to National Defense by saving needed materials. By starting now and shopping every day you are better able to carry your packages home. This means a great saving in tires and gasoline. It also means a saving in delivery time and man power. Start now and get your Christmas shopping done!

The stores are ready to serve you. Their Christmas merchandise is on display; their regular trained force is better able to assist you than the inexperienced assistants that it will be necessary to employ later; the selection of articles is better now than it will be later when stocks will be depleted and new merchandise will be difficult—maybe impossible—to get.

The stores are doing their part. It is up to you to do yours.

If at all possible shop before noon and on the days when the stores are not so crowded.

Make out your shopping lists.

Read the ads and take note of the stores featuring the articles you want.

Know the color and size of the article you want.

Be sure you know the correct address if you are having the gift sent directly from the store.

Decide beforehand what you want to buy for each person on your Christmas list and stick to your decision.

Be patient with the sales clerks. Bickering will only serve to slow down the service.

If the stores do not have the article you are looking for, accept a substitute. The production of many articles has been curtailed to give way to the manufacturing of essential war products.

These are little things that require only a minimum of effort from the individual. But if everyone cooperates (and everyone should!) they will add greatly to our country's War Program.

WASHINGTON'S HOME MORNING NEWSPAPER

THE PARADE OF THE WOODEN SOLDIER

By Anne Hagner

The gang around Dupont Circle (and other important small fry centers at points north, south, east and west) will tell you that the complexion of the toys may have changed somewhat—but Christmas is going to look just like Christmas anyway, war or no war.

Oh, yes, there are a few metal toys still to be found on local store counters, but they were ordered to replenish empty shelves last Christmas; shipments stopped on such nonpriority materials early last summer.

But there are plenty of substitutes to fill all of the stockings, and the gurgle-and-romper set barely will notice the difference.

In military toys, 1942 style, there are enough means of conveyance to set a whole army in motion. Designed for forays around the block are olive drab jeeps, exact miniatures of the real thing with one important exception: they are all wood, even to maple wheels, save for necessary nuts and bolts.

Then there are handsome airplanes also wooden and light pressboard), camouflaged tanks, antiaircraft guns on wheels, commando cars, and a signal scout car with forequarters shaped like a Walt Disney giraffe. On his neck is painted the Morse code, and his ears are designated, right for dash, left for dot. The driver can maneuver the cars for signaling by means of a set of levers.

In the Naval motif there is a snappy blue mosquito boat and a tremendous battleship, which the pint-sized skipper may steer cross-country by its main smokestack. There is room for the captain and two small passengers aboard, although on the other big wooden toys there is space only for the driver.

The beloved express wagon is no more; the last of the postregulation supply was exhausted long ago. Another war casualty is the metal baby-walker, but to supplant it there is one of all wooden construction, except for the metal-backed seat.

Cardboard is the big net item in toys; witness a 57-piece army and a 57-piece combat fleet, all to be constructed by embryo Henry Kaisers. They sell for $1 per set .

Few new playthings grace the market; manufacturers figure that they were fortunate to get out as many duplicates of old styles as they did. But one of the innovations is a small music machine, made by a toy company that once specialized in lithographing metal. This contrivance is made of cardboard, except for pedals of reclaimed rubber.

Naturally airplanes, destroyers, mosquito boats, submarines and every other implement of modern warfare has been reproduced faithfully in every variety of small toys—and all in wood or pressboard.

The outward appearance of dolls has changed very little—but their insides now are made of domestic stuffing instead of the imported kapok of yesteryear. And many dolls are garbed as soldiers or sailors or Marines.

Toys have been pretty thoroughly militarized for about three years—ever since one Christmas when the First Lady observed that she disapproved of warlike toys, and many stores deemphasized them. After that the trend went all out for military playthings when England and France declared war. This year the games designed for youthful consumption sound more martial than ever: "Flying Aces," "Ranger Commandos," and "Yankee Doodle" are a few.

Greatest loss to many children and their fathers will be that of their beloved electric trains; no more will be made, and there are very few in stock, none with replaceable parts. But with or without trains—Santa Claus is sure to have a pretty big load, after all.

The teddy bear outweighs 5-year-old Barbara Ann Mangan of 5430 Fourth Street Northwest, but she finds him fascinating just the same. He is stuffed with cotton instead of the customary kapok, now impossible to import

Charles Brewer, 10, of Waldorf, Md., in the nautical uniform of Leonard Hall School, stops during his tour of a local toy department to examine a miniature coast defense in cardboard and wood—antiaircraft gun, cannons, airplanes, submarines, searchlights, battleships

Dick Alexander, 5, of 5902 Wilson Lane, Bethesda, Md., on a signal scout car which signals dots and dashes with its ears

'Cook With Gas' But Do It Right

Now you're "cooking with gas!" But soon gas may become more scarce than it is now, and it is imperative for housewives to use their gas as economically as possible.

The first rule of economical gas cooking, say WPB gas experts, is to be sure that the flame is a clear blue. If it is not, two things may be indicated: that the burners need cleaning or that the adjustment of the burner is incorrect and too much air is entering with the gas.

Household Hints

If your red tape trouble consists of dangling cords and overlong extensions; if you're perplexed by plugs, and fussing over fuses, these suggestions may help:

Don't run an extension cord under a rug, if you can help it. If there is no other way to handle the wiring problem, then be sure the cord is flat, not round. These flat cords were designed for this express job.

Never nail extension cords to the wall or floor. It's more satisfactory—and far safer—to install extra outlets. Or, hang the extra cord on well-rounded hooks, or fasten with metal clips made for the purpose.

Makeshift wiring is an expensive economy. If you need a longer cord on an appliance, have an electrician lengthen it for you. Don't try splicing on a piece of cord yourself and covering it with baseball tape. It's dangerous, even if you did pass that course!

Be sure to use approved moisture proof wiring out-of-doors. Safer, and far less costly in the long run.

Remember to cut off the current before working on any part of the wiring or making repairs to fixtures. And, of course, always disconnect appliances before attempting to repair them.

A Competent Homemaker

The First First Lady

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Abigail Adams, the first First Lady to live in the White House, didn't think much of it! The lady with the soft lace caps, the pointed, determined nose and the tight, determined lips raised her thick, dark eyebrows and condemned the new Executive Mansion as "cold, cheerless and inconvenient." For the good New England housekeeper she was, the bare new home must have seemed a distinct "comedown."

Abigail, the daughter of a New England preacher, William Smith, had had her fill of good solid living. She was one of those "delicate" females of former days who bore five children (one of whom was to become the sixth President), gave up her husband to his duties in a new republic, stayed at home in Quincy to manage a large household and a large estate. She was a good correspondent, her letters reflecting the whole, busy, stressful life of those exciting days.

To be First Lady, you gather, meant little to Abigail—as a matter of fact, she probably blessed the day her husband, old John, retired from public life, although he took his defeat for a second term so bitterly that he refused to remain in Washington for the inauguration of his successor, Thomas Jefferson. Abigail considered her Washington sojourn an unpleasant patriotic duty. For years, while husband John had been "missionizing" in Europe, she had kept the home fires burning and had created a tight, comfortable bulwark against "public life" in her beautifully furnished New England home.

Wash Dried in East Room

Her ordeal in the White House didn't last long, however, for it was not until the last few months of the Adams Administration that the First Family occupied this new strange dwelling, barnlike and incomplete. She hung the Adams wash in the great East Room, whether through contempt or necessity is not recorded!

Above all, Abigail was the realistic type, taking her husband's career in her stride (long years of his absences, precarious "hostessing" in London after the Revolution, when she was the ambassador's lady for his rude, crude "up-start" Nation, giving up her son, John Qunicy, to his long European wanderings, seeing bitterness, turmoil and triumph). In history it sounds resounding to say she was the wife and mother of Presidents, but if you had asked Abigail she'd probably just as soon have skipped most of it, to live in peace and comfort as a good New England housewife. Certainly, she would as soon have skipped the White House!

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl, 20, Who Knows Quite a Few Boys In the Army, and Is Frequent Visitor To Naval Academy, Wants Officer Beaux

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: How can a girl in Washington meet Army and Naval officers? In asking such a question, I shall probably seem extremely snobbish and scheming, since it is reasonably easy for a girl to meet soldiers or sailors at USO dances. But I hasten to explain that I don't feel it is "beneath me" to go with men in the ranks, since I do know quite a few boys who are in the Army. However, I must admit that there are distinct advantages in dating officers.

I have been dating midshipmen at Annapolis nearly every weekend for three years, but I am beginning to feel a bit too old for them, as I am now 20. My two favorite girl friends, who are "Navy juniors," are in the same predicament. This is because the midshipmen we dated are usually sent to some place remote from Washington or Annapolis after graduation. Occasionally some girl I know gets married to a naval officer and invites me to the wedding and reception, where I meet a few officers; but they are usually married or with girls of their own.

I am employed in a Government department, where I put in long hours, and, in addition, I am taking nine hours' college work a week, in night classes, at a local university, which keeps me too busy to study the situation. There are a few officers in my classes, none of whom are especially interesting. All my possibilities of meeting the kind of men I want to know seem to be exhausted—unless you can suggest something. So, do you know of any places where officers foregather to be introduced to girls? Or perhaps some sort of war work that doesn't take too much time? That is the type of legitimate opportunity I am hoping to find. V. P. B.

No Social Centers For 'Brass Hats'

DEAR V. P. B.: So far as I am able to learn, nothing of a "civic-minded" nature is being done here, to "glad-hand" officers on leave from the armed services. As a matter of fact, one Washington matron with whom I have just talked, who has been a moving spirit in gearing the community to constructive consciousness of, and morale-building participation in, the war effort volunteered the opinion that, "We seem to be neglecting a real responsibility in that regard. A fine spirit of hospitality is being shown the enlisted men and draftees, but the general idea seems to be that officers can look out for themselves on the social front, which I think is a mistake, when you think of the hundreds and thousands of young men in that classification who must find themselves in strange cities, from time to time, and, being human, very much in the mood for a friendly exchange on safe ground."

I suppose this tacit assumption that fighting men in the officer classification don't need, or perhaps would not respond to, the rather impersonal brand of hospitality which a grateful citizenry traditionally provides men in the ranks, derives from the fact that many of the "brass hats" are drawn from the class of society which normally and customarily is advantaged by farflung "contacts"—stemming from family and ancestral affiliations, schoolday associations, accustomed travel, business and professional acquaintanceships developed on a broad scale, etc.—so that they might be expected to find themselves on more or less familiar ground in almost any city this side of the water, where the social amenities continue to flourish as usual. For instance, I think, offhand, of a young Army officer (son of a public servant) stationed here with his wife, whose home has been—since Pearl Harbor—continuously at the disposal of young officer friends of his from "all over," who come for meals, for the night, for the week-end, or for a fortnight's stay, enroute to other ports of call. And his record of eager hospitality in this regard—which seems to me phenomenal—appears to be duplicated by dozens or even scores of other "background" associates of his, who are similarly situated here.

Hospitality Program May Be in Order

What this proves, however, I am not prepared to say. It might mean that the public is right in thinking officers would have no use for a "key to the city," figuratively speaking. Or, on the other hand, so much evidence of "visitors in our midst"—of this classification—might be construed as strong evidence that more provision for their special welcome, as honored guests of the community, should be made. In any event, the only set-up I have found catering exclusively to officers—in a "social guide" capacity—is the Officers Service Club of the United Nations, just opening in the Burlington Hotel, at 1120 Vermont Avenue Northwest. But this, I understand, is in no sense a foregathering place to meet girls. It is something of an information bureau—to help officers find lodgings, get a line-up on theaters, restaurants, etc., and generally learn their way about the city. And if need of such a service has been manifested—a service which aims to help the newly come officer "feel at home"—then it certainly would seem that a more comprehensive program of hospitality to officers was in order, too.

So much for the dope on the general situation. As you can see, it provides no leeway for suggesting how to meet officers, in a semi-social way, under "war work" auspices. And to make the outlook even more dismal from your viewpoint, the Army's new policy is to assign all officers up to 28 years of age and three-fourths of those up to 35 years of age to field duty, which certainly decimates the bachelor officer stagline on the home front and tends, furthermore, to take such eligibles out of general social circulation by steering them straight back to the waiting arms of family and old friends when they are on furlough.

Best Put Trust In Law of Averages

As for your prospects on the Navy side—since you "dragged" for three years at the Naval Academy, it seems to me you should have retained from that experience some kind of social tie with your beaux or their roommates that would lead to an occasional date with a chap in naval officer's uniform, here on business or holiday and referred to you by one of them. That's the kind of "legitimate opportunity" that should be operating in your favor right now. But since it isn't, I can only advise you to cordially cultivate the friends you currently see, of all ages and both sexes, and trust to luck that some day one of them will bring you face to face with "the kind of man you want to meet." M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

With virtually everyone taking pen in hand or typewriter in tow to write to soldier, sailor, Congressman, editor, Mrs. Roosevelt, friend, enemy, et cetera, I decided to brush up on my letter writing. How could I become a famous letter writer—one whose missives would be eagerly awaited by recipients, one whom publishers would pursue, one whose name would become a byword in epistolary art down the ages?

To find this out to whom could I turn but to Mme. de Sevigne?

Here was a woman whose name had been synonymous with great letter writing for 250 years. Here was a woman who had lived in the colorful times of Louis XIV of France (however, times no more colorful than our own) and who had made the most of it. Above all, here was a woman credited with one of the most famous and oft-repeated of epigrams: "If I had had more time I would have written a shorter letter."

Famous Letter Writer, a 'Good Woman'

All right then, what did Mme. de Sevigne have that I didn't have—as a letter writer?

First, I was a trifle dashed to discover that the bulk of Mme. de Sevigne's letters were addressed not to a lover, a husband, or any of the Platonic men intellectuals with which French women of her mind and station were wont to consort, but to her daughter! Was it possible a woman could write another woman and reach the heights of epistolary art?

A second dash of cold water was my discovery that the madame herself was no siren or romantic figure. Indeed, she was almost a paragon of virtues, an attractive and brilliant woman widowed at 25, and thereafter turning down offers of marriage—and of liaison—to devote her life to the rearing of her son and daughter, to her studies and her devotions; participating in the social life of one of the most profligate of French courts, that of Louis XIV, yet never herself touched by its scandal; a woman who was always upright, sensible, responsible, pious, a model of rectitude. Was it possible such a "good woman" could write very exciting letters?

Not Too Clever, but Entertaining

And yet, on second thought, all this was encouraging. Most women of America who were seeking light on letter writing—and most certainly myself—could take hope from this setup. Indeed, were we not all much more akin to Mme. de Sevigne than to—say Mme. Du Barry?

Fortified with this thought, I plunged into one of the thick volumes that are Mme. de Sevigne's contribution to literature to history—and to letter writing. And here in brief for the benefit of all other aspiring letter writers is what I learned:

One does not have to give birth to an epigram every other sentence in a letter to follow Mme. de Sevigne's formula. Indeed, her witticisms, her trenchant observations on life are never strained or conscious, as are the "smart" letter writers of today. They appear naturally, unexpectedly at long intervals, to surprise and delight the reader. Thus, after describing to her daughter a session at her chateau with tiresome guests, she wrote: "The dullness of others weighs me down more than my own." Again, writing to her father's cousin, Count de Bussy (also her rejected suitor), of the betrothal of her daughter, Margaret, to Count de Grignan, she observes: "The public seems pleased. This is a great deal, for we are such fools as to be almost always governed by its opinion."

Long Introductions Were Eschewed

No stuffy letter-writer was Mme. de Sevigne. When she started a letter she plunged in without formality, or any fustian phrases, such as "your at hand, etc.," or a report on the weather, or an apology for not writing. "Come hither my son-in-law," she begins a mildly chiding letter to Count de Grignan. Again, writing Count de Bussy to congratulate him on a military exploit, she begins jestingly: "Will you always disgrace your relatives? Will you never be weary of making yourself the subject of conversation in every campaign?" Once when complimented for her letters, she replied she was glad they pleased and added, "I know they have no stiffness in them."

Not only gayety and wit but the retailing of interesting gossip give charm to Mme. de Sevigne's letters. News concerning the cloth-of-gold dress of Mme. de Montespan, mistress of Louis XIV; the antics and remarks of Ninon de L'Enclos, noted courtesan of the day, and the trouble over seating arrangements for the dauphiness and the refugee English Queen—all this is passed on by Mme. de Sevigne to her daughter without criticism and without malice.

Never Dwelt on What Ailed Her

She was also a rare letter writer in that she did not enumerate her own ailments for her correspondents. When ill with rheumatism, her body swollen and racked with pain, unable to use her hands, she dictated to her son-in-law one of the gayest letters she ever wrote. "My face is very little altered," she wrote, "you soon discover that you had seen it somewhere before." "It is nothing" was always the refrain of her letters written in time of illness. She maintained an equally hopeful outlook concerning things in general. Her last written sentence in a letter to her daughter the year before she died was: "It is delightful weather, the winter is past and we have a prospect of spring that is superior to spring itself."

Yes, Mme. de Sevigne as a letter writer had a gift of expression, and the eye of a reporter, and a gay spirit and an interesting mind. But she had something else, something not important to literature or history, but certainly something that made those who received her letters clamor for more and bestow on her their love and honor. It was something in which she unconsciously antedated Dale Carnegie and the popular psychologists—the art of making the other fellow feel successful.

HOW TO WRITE A LETTER

In all her letters, the person to whom she is writing is the hero or heroine. The letter revolves to a large extent about the doings and interests of that person—and not about herself. She constantly writes her daughter how beautiful, how clever, how brilliant, how wonderful she is and what a great success she is making of her married life. She passes on every compliment, every word of admiration she has heard concerning her daughter, son-in-law, and grandchildren. It is the same with her friends. All the recipients of her letters loom in stature as she addresses them and there is such a warm sincerity in her eulogies that they carry conviction.

"What a great build-up she gives everyone she writes to!" I thought as I closed the volume of letters. "How wonderful to have anyone write to you like that!"

And then I realized that what I—and the rest of the world wanted—was not to become Mme. de Sevignes, but to receive her letters.

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York packs books in the executive mansion at Albany, his home for 10 years, preparatory to leaving for Washington to undertake the job of United States director of foreign relief and rehabilitation. His job will be to care for inhabitants of countries "liberated" by the United States fighting forces. Governor Lehman, who is expected to leave for the National Capital late next week, is watched by Mrs. Lehman and "Skippy"

Gov., Mrs. Herbert Lehman To Arrive Here Next Week

Resigns as New York State Head To Be Director of Foreign Relief

By Howard Dobson

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 27 (AP).—The folks in the big old house on the corner, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert H. Lehman, are moving away.

He's the Governor, and he is resigning next week to go to Washington as United States Director of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation. They plan to leave Wednesday or Thursday.

When they located 10 years ago in the big old house, New York's executive mansion since 1877, their three children—Peter, John and Hilda—were 15, 12 and 11. Peter was away at boarding school in Deerfield, Mass., but John and Hilda had been in school here and continued.

Now, Peter is in England, a pilot in the Royal Canadian Air Force. John is a lieutenant in the United States Armored Force, his parents don't know where. Hilda, who married two years ago next month, is taking a secretarial course in New York City. Her husband is overseas with the United States Army Signal Corps.

The Lehmans' 14 years in Albany have been much the same as any 14 years experienced by any family with children from 7 to 11 years old grownig into young folk of 21 to 25. There were schools, illnesses, family vacations, graduations, weddings, grandchildren.

The Governor has packed all the copies of his executive budgets, remembering some little detail out of each one that made it big news in the depression years when he was fighting to pare down a $100,000,000 deficit.

"The surplus may be as much as 75 million dollars when I leave," he says with pride. "We were sure when the fiscal year began that it would be 54 million dollars."

Pacing up and down the little second-floor study in which Gov. Grover Cleveland received reports of the votes that elected him President in 1884, Lehman remarked, "This house looks gloomy from the outside, but really it is warm, roomy, bright. It is all any man could ask. It has tradition."

A corner grocery across the street from the mansion has erected a billboard carrying the names of "our friends and neighbors" who have entered military service. Peter Lehman's was one of the first names inscribed, and John's has been added since.

T. R. Finlaysons In Buffalo

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Finlayson whose marriage took place recently in St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Baltimore, have gone to Buffalo, N. Y., to make their home. Mr. Finlayson is with the Bell Air Craft in that city.

The bride is the former Miss Eileen Clare Upson, daughter of Mrs. William Upson and the late Captain Upson, of Towson, Md. Mr. Finlayson's parents are Mr. and Mrs. John Finlayson of Chevy Chase, Md.

Frank Meek of London gave his niece in marriage. The bride's attendants were Miss Doreen Upson, her sister, who was maid of honor; Miss Jean George, Miss Jane Owens, Miss Carolyn Kipp, all of Towson; Miss Jean Finlayson of Chevy Chase, Mrs. Frank Lozupone, of Alexandria, Va.

Colin Finlayson, brother of the bridegroom, served as best man, and the ushers were William Finlayson, another brother; Pvt. Robert Harris, of Chevy Chase; Lieut. Frank P. Lozupone of Alexandria, and Haskel Pettigrew of Townson.

The bride was graduated from the University of Maryland College of Home Economics and is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority. Mr. Finlayson is a graduate of the College of Engineering of the University of Pennsylvania.

Emily Osborn Joins WAVES

Miss Emily Osborn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Burr Osborn of Takoma Park, Md., left this week for Oklahoma A. and M. College, Stillwater, where she will receive her basic training in the WAVES.

Before her departure Miss Osborn was guest of honor at several farewell parties. Her parents gave a cocktail party Sunday for members of the younger set at their home.

Members of the Capital Yacht Club, where Miss Osborn keeps her sailboat, Miss Epps, gave her a party Saturday night aboard the Atricilla, the yacht of Paul Holmes.

Solomon Costa Off For Training Station

Cadet Solomon Costa, jr., who has been in training at the Columbia Military Academy in Tennessee, has left for the Great Lakes Naval Training School to be a naval pilot gunner.

The son of Senor and Senora de Costa, formerly of Puerto Rico, now of Washington, Cadet Costa is the the brother of Lieut. Lino Costa, flier and instructor of the United States Army Air Corps, and of Capt. David Costa, United States Army.

Adolf Berles Hosts to Carlos Arroyo

President Carlos Arroyo del Rio of Eucador, was guest of honor at a luncheon yesterday given by the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Adolf Berle.

The Minister of Finance of Ecuador, Vicente Illingworth, the Ambassador of Ecuador, Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro, and the American Ambassador to Ecuador, Boaz Long, were also in the company.

Other guests were the Venezuelan Ambassador, Dr. Diogenes Escalante; the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Will Clayton, Mr. and Mrs. William Burden, J. Edgar Hoover, Dr. Ernst of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau and Mrs. Truxtun Beale.

President Arroyo celebrated his birthday anniversary yesterday but the real celebration came at midnight on Thursday following the Ecuadorian Ambassador's dinner in honor of his President.

Hosts at the late evening party were the Commercial Counselor of the Ecuadorian Embassy, Emilio Maulme, and Senora de Maulme, who entertained at their apartment at Dorchester House. On the stroke of 12 about 35 glasses filled with champagne, were raised by the guests—all Ecuadorians—in a toast to their President.

President Arroyo left Washington yesterday for Detroit to visit war production plants and from there will go to New York.

Guatemalan Minister to Arrive Monday

Still more cementing of good-neighbor relations will take place next week when Dr. Carlos Salazar, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Guatemala, arrives in the Capital on an official visit.

Dr. Salazar, who will come in on Monday, has had a long and distinguished public career in his native country. A prominent jurist, he was for many years dean of the law school of the National University of Guatemala and has served several times in Congress. Foreign Affairs, as his title would indicate, are his specialty. He was the Guatemalan delegate to several Inter-American Conferences, attending the meetings at Havana, Montevideo, Buenos Aires and Lima.

With many friends in the Capital, Dr. Salazar served here in 1932 and 1933 as agent for his government before the Arbitral Tribunal, which settled the long-standing boundary controversy between Guatemala and Honduras, under the chairmanship of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes.

He has served his government as Minister of Foreign Affairs since 1934 and has participated in the meetings of Foreign Ministers at Havana and Panama.

War Brides Set New Styles—Wedding Rings for Husbands

Old European Custom Being Adopted Here as "Something to Remember You By"

By Edith Gaylord

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—The war bride who wants to give a lasting token that will mean something forever and can always go with her man in service is finding the ideal answer in a wedding ring—for him.

More and more, society pages headline the double ring ceremony and feminine as well as masculine voices repeat, "with this ring, I thee wed——." It's an old European custom to which the war has given impetus for American adoption.

The traditional plain gold circlet remains the most popular, but there is a variety of simple, semi-decorative bands. One modernistic effect that is popular is a wide band made up of three plain circlets, each in a different tone of gold.

"A man likes a tailored ring," one jeweler said. "He does not want orange blossoms twining around his finger.

"With so many quick, standup chapel weddings that take place on short notice and are not elaborate, there may be no double ring ceremony," he said. "But there is a definite increase in the bride's purchase of a ring for the bridegroom, which she then gives him as a wedding present. Sometimes it is a signet ring."

More frequent use of the double ceremony was reported by a fashionable Fifth Avenue church, which listed several recent society weddings as examples.

The Little Church Around the Corner, where so many couples from elsewhere come to be married, acknowledged a few double ring weddings, but declined to call them a trend—yet.

Mary F. Flemer To Be Bride of Harold Sheridan

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lewis Flemer announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary-Frances, to Harold Stanley Sheridan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold James Sheridan of Delaware, Ohio.

Both Miss Flemer and Mr. Sheridan are graduates of Ohio Wesleyan University, class of 1942. Miss Flemer is a member of Kappa Delta Sorority and of Phi Beta Kappa. Mr. Sheridan, who majored in economics, is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity. He is now serving in the United States Army.

At Pierre

Mrs. Fleming Newbold has gone to the Pierre in New York for a brief stay.

Miss Owen Is Wed in Church Rites

St. Columbia's Church was the setting last night for the marriage of Miss Jeannette Owen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Banks Owen, jr., to Alun Tudor Jenkins. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Edmund Jenkins of Cleveland, Ohio.

Officiating at the 8 o'clock ceremony was the Rev. C. Randolph Mengers. The bride was attired in a white satin gown and finger-tip veil and carried an old-fashioned bouquet of roses and blue delphiniums. Her only attendant, Miss Louise Teller, wore a pale blue faille frock and carried Talisman roses. Beau Barlow served as best man.

The bride is a senior at the University of Maryland, where she is a member of Alpha Xi Delta sorority and Pi Delta Epsilon honorary society. Before enlisting in the United States Naval Reserve, the bridegroom was the chief announcer at Radio Stations WHK and WCLE in Cleveland.

Cuban Ambassador To Entertain

The Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Aurelio Concheso, and Senora de Concheso, will entertain at a dinner Friday evening, December 11, in honor of the President of Cuba, Maj. Gen. Fulgencio Batista, who will arrive in Washington December 8. The dinner will be followed by a large reception.

President Batista will spend his first night in Washington as a guest of President Roosevelt at the White House and will go to Blair House the following day.

Miss Lidia M. Brizzi Is Wed To John H. Campbell, Jr.

MRS. JOHN H. CAMPBELL, JR.

Church Ceremony Followed by Home Reception

The Shrine of the Sacred Heart was the scene of the wedding yesterday afternoon of Miss Lidia M. Brizzi, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Brizzi of this city, and John H. Campbell, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Campbell of Chelyan, W. Va. The Rev. Laurence J. Wempe officiated at the 5:30 o'clock ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of ivory satin and Chantilly lace, made with a sweetheart neckline and a long train. Her fingertip veil fell from a coronet of lace and orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of white roses.

LIEUT. ARCHIE M. SMITH, JR.

Lieut. Smith Back on Leave In Leesburg

Given up for lost and officially reported "missing in action," Lieut. Archie M. Smith, jr., U.S.M.C., is back among family and friends today with a "thriller" tale to tell.

Just now he is earning a well-deserved rest at Sterling, the family home near Leesburg, Va., with his father, Archibald Smith, and his brother, Charles McGill Smith of Washington, after seven months' intensive fighting in the South Pacific.

In his own words he tells this story:

"We were sent out in a striking force to attack a cruiser and a destroyer. We were about 180 miles from headquarters. I was the last one to dive and I drew a line of anti-aircraft fire from the destroyer. They got so dog-gone close they shot holes all through us. One hit my radio in front of me, another shot up my gunner's equipment."

As Lieutenant Smith pulled out, he saw some Japanese planes converge on him, so he got away as quickly as he could. He was flying a scout bomber and knew he would be no match for pursuit ships.

"I was going along full gun," he continued, "and finally hid in a cloud and they stopped shooting. I circled around a while—I don't know how long I was flying—and finally headed for home, but the weather was so bumpy and windy and it was raining then, so I had a hard time plotting a course. I set out for what I thought was San Isabelle. I circled around, but it was getting darker and the weather was getting worse and worse.

"After I definitely convinced myself I didn't know where I was, I made up my mind to take one of two courses. I could reach Guadalcanal if I was at San Isabelle or I would end up in the sea if I wasn't. A long time ago I made a resolution never to go down at sea if I could possibly keep from doing so. I landed as near the island as I could. The plane came down about a mile and a half from shore, and we jumped out as quick as we could and got our life raft. Just as Costillo (the gunner) and I got on the raft, the plane went right down under—woosh—just like that. We paddled to shore, and I still didn't know where we were. But we got on the beach, turned the little raft over and got under it. There were a lot of fireflies and they nearly drove me crazy, for we thought they were Japs smoking cigarettes.

"At daybreak next morning, we walked along the beach toward a village where we had seen some people when we flew over. When we got there, it was deserted, so we crept into the nearest straw hut and went to sleep. We slept pretty well, too, as we were not awakened until the next morning by the sound of native tom-toms.

"Peeping through a crack, we saw a couple of natives—an old man and a young boy. Following them, we came upon the meeting and heard the Doxology and knew it was a religious ceremony, as they were all kneeling on the ground and reciting prayers in Latin. They turned out to be a friendly tribe that had been taught by Catholic missionaries some years ago.

"We stayed in the bush for three days and they got word back to Guadalcanal where we were. All that time the Japs were less than 8 miles away. At the end of several days Guadalcanal sent a 'duck' amphibian plane which landed and took us back to the base. That duck looked good enough to eat, too!"

Archie, jr., as he is known down Middleburg way, doesn't see any reason why anyone should be particularly interested in his story.

"A guy goes out to do a mission, gets shot at and lost and has to land somewhere as best he can."

Lieutenant Smith stayed in Guadalcanal two weeks on flight duty after he had been lost and did not know that he has been reported missing until he reached San Diego, Calif., and wired to his father in New Orleans.

Questioned further about his experiences in the war Lieutenant Smith ended with "It gets pretty hard on your nerves being under constant bombing attacks. But most of us are too tired to be scared or too scared to be tired."

Plane Downed At Sea, He Lands on Isle

Ensign Sibold And Bride On Honeymoon

Ensign Arthur Pleasant Sibold, jr., and Mrs. Sibold are now on a brief honeymoon following their wedding Tuesday in New York.

The bride is the former Miss Elizabeth Bartels Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Gordon Porter, of Alexandria, Va. Mr. Porter is with the War Production Board. Ensign Sibold is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Sibold of Chattanooga, Tenn.

The ceremony was performed by Msgr. Joseph Flannelly in the rectory of St. Patrick's Cathedral and a reception followed at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

The bride wore a frock of aqua crepe trimmed in seed pearls and carried a spray of white orchids. Mrs. Robert Tomlin of Alexandria, the matron of honor, was in beige jersey worn with a brown hat. She carried Talisman roses. Miss Josephine Wood Sibold, young sister of the bridegroom, was the other attendant, and Ensign Alfred S. Hill, U. S. N., was best man.

Mrs. Sibold is a student at Hollins College in Virginia. She is president of the Alexandria Chapter of the Children of the American Revolution. Ensign Sibold was graduated from McCallie Preparatory School in Chattanooga and from the United States Naval Academy in June. He is now in active service.

Lieut. Brennan, Bride on Trip After Marriage

Lieut. and Mrs. Joseph Girard Brennan, who were married recently in the rectory of St. Joseph's Church, left afterward for a wedding trip to New York and will go to Indianapolis, Ind., where the bridegroom is stationed, to make their home.

Before her marriage the bride was Miss Mary Ann Dick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert I. Dick of Milwaukee, Wis. For the last year she has been serving with the Office of Civilian Defense in Washington. Lieutenant Brennan is the son of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Brennan of New York and Brewster, N. Y.

The ceremony was performed at 5 o'clock by the Rev. Mr. McAdams, and a reception followed at the home of the bride's uncle, Adrian J. Dornbush of Hyattsville, Md.

Davidge and Mrs. Orme Wilson.

Critics of Washington's War Effort Should Look to Other Cities

By Marie McNair

Washington, target of criticism during the early days of the war for its seemingly frivolous attitude on a great catastrophe, can talk back today.

Parties, to be true, still go on. Small dinners, now and then a cocktail party, occasionally are marked up on the calendar. But there's usually a motive behind any gathering in a Washington drawing room or a dining room these days, and it's a well known fact that business is sometimes accomplished with more dispatch over a tea cup than over a polished mahogany desk.

The Nation's Capital has settled down to the business of winning the war, and young and old alike are mobilized to that aim. So let the folk from the hinterland point a finger at us now!

The debutante, as such, is extinct in Washington in this year of 1942.

Many girls are in college, others have thrown themselves whole-heartedly into volunteer war work, still others are earning their own livelihood for the first time in defense jobs.

Claiming to be but first cousin to a debutante is Paulina Longworth, daughter of Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and the late Speaker of the House, who will come home from Vassar College at Christmas time. Mrs. Longworth has planned a tea during the holiday season when her young and pretty daughter will have the opportunity of meeting some of her mothers' old friends. But Mrs. Longworth insists it's not a debut in any sense of the word.

For the debutante in New York the usual frivolity of a typical season has been somewhat altered with the war, and elaborate balls which lasted until dawn are definitely out of the picture today.

Parties will be smaller and on a much less grand scale. Too, the stag line will be appreciably shorter, for almost all the young men who usually could be counted on to make a girl's season a "success" are away on the high seas or in foreign lands.

So a new field has opened up for the New York debutante this year. She has turned to music, and for her the opening of the Metropolitan Opera Monday evening was an introduction to operatic music, as well as to the glitter of the traditional opera scene.

Miss Fanny Baldwin, daughter of Representative and Mrs. Joseph Clark Baldwin, who made her debut at a ball last Thursday evening in New York, given by her parents, is one debutante taking up the new trend. She was with her parents at the opening of the opera, along with Representative Baldwin's sister, Mrs. Baldwin Preston, Fred Shrady and Wallace T. Foote, one of her partners at her debut dance.

Miss Baldwin is a modern debutante who combines work and play. When she's in Washington she serves as her father's secretary up on "the Hill."

Orchids should go to Donald Peabody Blagden for the introduction of youth to New York's opera season. When the old guard patrons—the Vanderbilts, the Astors, et al.—began to relinquish their "inherited" places in the Metropolitan Opera House it was Mr. Blagden who looked to the younger generation to be their successors. He found them both interested and cooperative, with the result that from now on Metropolitan Opera audiences will sparkle, not with diamonds, but with youth.

Misses LaFrance Engagements of Interest Here

At a recent tea given by Mr. and Mrs. George E. LaFrance, of Long Beach, Calif., announcement was made of the engagements of their three daughters, the Misses Ruth, Naomi and Mary LaFrance.

Washington has particular interest in the engagements of Miss Ruth LaFrance and Miss Mary LaFrance.

Miss Ruth LaFrance's fiance is Albert G. Brason, of Washington, formerly of Worchester, Mass. Mr. Brason attended Massachusetts State College and is now branch manager of postindex division of Art Metal Construction Co. Miss LaFrance is a graduate of Pomona College.

Miss Mary LaFrance resides in Washington where she is minister of music at Universalist National Memorial Church. She is a graduate of Westminster Choir College. Her fiance is Glenn B. Ogden, jr., son of the Rev. and Mrs. Glenn B. Ogden of Colusa, Calif. He is now in the C. P. S. Camp in Maryland.

In North Carolina

Laila Dewidar Is Married to Rev. MacLean

Miss Laila Dewidar of Surrey, England, and the Rev. Thomas Wooten MacLean of Warrenton were married yesterday in the Warrenton Presbyterian Church, of which the bridegroom is rector, the ceremony taking place at high noon with the Rev. C. Lynnwood Brown, University minister of the First Presbyterian Church in Knoxville, Tenn., and the Rev. Paul D. Bowden, of St. James Episcopal Church, Warrenton, performing the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Amy Norah Dewidar. For the last year she has been living in Virginia, and recently has been the guest of Mrs. Richard Rice Barrett of Ridgelea, Warrenton.

For her wedding the bride wore a fuchsia crepe gown made with a draped skirt. Her black hat was trimmed with a fuchsia feather. She wore a shoulder bouquet of gardenias and carried a prayerbook. Miss Aida Dewidar was her sister's only attendant and the Rev. Wade H. Boggs of Shreveport, La., and Richmond, served as best man.

The bridegroom is the son of the Rev. Sylvester Brown MacLean and Mrs. Florence Wooten MacLean, of Maxton, N. C.

Mrs. Richard R. Barrett entertained at a luncheon for the immediate families and out-of-town guests following the ceremony.

J. D. Kaufmans On Wedding Trip To Live Here

Mr. and Mrs. David Baer have announced the marriage of Mrs. Baer's sister, Miss Bertha Israel, to Joseph David Kaufman, of Washington, on Wednesday November 25 in Alexandria, Va. Rabbis Hugo Schiff and Norman Gerstenfeld officiated. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Israel of Reading, Pa.

Both the bride and bridegroom are active in welfare work and the Community Chest organization. Mrs. Kaufman is a member of the volunteer staff of the Office of Civilian Defense. Mr. Kaufman is the son of Mrs. David Kaufman and the late Mr. Kaufman.

After a short wedding trip to New York the bridal couple will make their home at Woodley Park Towers.

Aretha Ledford Becomes Bride of Robert Garretson

In a simple ceremony last evening at the Fort Myer Chapel, Miss Aretha Ledford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Ledford of Kersey, Colo., was married to Robert Lyle Garretson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Garretson of Greely, Colo., Chaplain Magnan officiated at the 8 o'clock ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by Herbert Hawkins, wore a gown of heavy white satin made on princess lines with a long train. Her fingertip veil fell from a coronet of seed pearls and she carried a bouquet of white roses and bouvardia. Miss Libey Arnold was the maid of honor and only attendant.

Corpl. Albert Rivella served as best man and the ushers were Donald Garretson, a brother of the bridegroom; Frank Reed and William Wilson.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the best man. Robert Garretson, who is with the Army Band, and his bride then left for a honeymoon in Clarendon, Va.

'Flying Fortress,' at Met., At Its Best When Flying

Richard Greene Star of Another Film Depicting Regenerating Power of Service; Interesting and Informative Short Reels

"FLYING FORTRESS." Warner Brothers English-made picturization of a screenplay by Brock Williams, Gordon Elleseley and Edward Dryhurst, starring Richard Greene with Carla Lehmann, Betty Stockfield, Donald Stewart, Charles Heslop, Sidney King, Basil Radford, John Stuart, Percy Parsons, Gerry Wilmot, Joss Ambler, Edward Rigby, John Boxer and Robert Beatty. Directed by Walter Forde. At the Metropolitan Theater.

FOR PURPOSES of quick classification, "Flying Fortress," the new screen feature at the Metropolitan Theater, might be described as a vague sort of combination of "I Wanted Wings" and "Captains of the Clouds," with faint traces of "A Yank in the R. A. F." and "Target for Tonight," but none of the substantial dramatic quality of any of them.

The first half of this English-made Warner Brothers salute to the character-making power of service to country is devoted to the escapades of a penthouse playboy who has discredited his hired pilot in a spree of drunken stunt flying, in which his drinking companion was killed at the controls in defiance of the pilot's warning. Both the gold-plated Jim Spence and the grounded "Sky" Kelly find their way into the Canadian Ferry Command, shuttling bombers over to England. The girl reporter turns out to be Kelly's sister and Kelly, of course, becomes Spence's pilot and official superior by as trite an arrangement of events as can be imagined.

Once, on the other side, both boys catch the spirit of service from the heroic examples of those on the home front and in the sky-fighting and win their wings in the R. A. F. Lady Deborah engages the Kelly interest and his sister is on hand as a foreign correspondent to reawaken romantic urges in Spence's bewinged breast.

When Berlin becomes the objective of a flight of American fortresses, with Deborah's brother as flight commander and both boys in his ship, the picture for the first time picks up an impressive momentum and gives an apparently authentic idea of what a bombing raid over Nazi Germany might be like. There is a high measure of suspense generated in these sequences and the gripping thrill of tense action in the scenes of aerial combat when the Flying Fortress is attacked on all sides by the Nazi fighter planes.

On the ground, however, realism is less skillfully managed. The model of the power-plant target is an atrocious makeshift upon which every bomb is a direct hit. The illusion so admirably sustained in the air is all but completely dispelled by the obvious falsity of what lies beneath.

The Cast, at Times, Belies Its Billing

Ostensibly the star of the picture, Richard Greene, long absent from the American cinematic scene, is cast in so conventional and so familiar a role, as Playboy Spence, that even his handsome features and competence as an actor cannot quite overcome the handicap. Greene plays with the surety and nice sense of comedy of one who had never been away from the cameras, rather than as an actor who had to be borrowed from the English military for his present assignment. Notwithstanding all this, his work is rather overshadowed by that of Donald Stewart, Canadian actor new to leading roles, as Kelly. Kelly, of course, has the more ingratiating part, but plays it, too, for all it is worth. Two excellent feminine performances are contributed to the film—one by Carla Lehmann, as Sydney Kelly, the girl reporter; the other by Betty Stockfield, the war worker of aristocratic birth. Miss Lehmann also is a new and charming personality, whose presence on the American screen will be welcome in future. Another splendid portrayal is tossed in by Sidney King, as Deborah's brother, Wing Commander Ottershaw, who has much to do with both the drama and the humor of hte play.

The short-reel supplementaries at the Metropolitan this week, in combination, add up to almost as commanding a total of entertainment as the major feature. "Dover," on view on numerous downtown screens this week, is an engrossing study of the heroism and resilience of the British populace living continually on the firing line. Various residents of Dover since the outbreak of the war in England, from the mayor down to the obscure housewife and the couple sitting on the park bench, express the fortitude of the people in the face of perpetual harassment from the enemy.

The Warner Brothers Technicolor production of "A Ship Is Born," not only demonstrates in what manner every State in the Union contributes to the building of a cargo vessel, but goes much farther in detailing the training of the personnel of the merchant marine. The public will derive a fund of interesting information on a topic of vital need from an attentive scrunity of this comprehensive and carefully made picturization of a service branch that has been too long ignored in favor of the fighting forces.

A brief Paramount newsreel clip, "Pattern for Victory," is the only additional complementary of a program that is heavily dominated by the martial spirit in some one or another of its manifold ramifications.

Long Absent From the Screen

RICHARD GREENE,
who returns to view as star of the Warner Brothers' British production of "Flying Fortress," being shown for the first time in Washington as chief feature for the week at the Metropolitan Theater. Carla Lehmann, a newcomer, appears in the principal feminine role in a drama laid on both sides of the Atlantic

Her 'Best Foot Forward!'

Hollywood, Nov. 27. (INS).—It's Lana Turner—not Lucille Ball—for the part of the dizzy movie star in "Best Foot Forward" at M-G-M, and if I'm not mistaken this is Lana's first musical since "Ziegfeld girl."

LANA TURNER

Just why they changed their minds so quickly when the picture was going into production I wouldn't be knowing. Maybe Producer Arthur Freed remembered Lana is a jitterbug fan and the presence of Harry James' band in the lineup would keep her happy. Or, more likely, the Metro bosses decided that a little expedition into the light and frothy would be a nice change for their pet blonde, who has had a run of dramas lately.

Virginia Weidler gets the part of la Turner's campus rival and it particularly interested me to hear that M-G-M is practically importing the rest of the cast from the New York stage hit. Gil Stratton, Nancy Walker, Kenny Bowers, Timmy Dix and Jack Jordan are Hollywood bound to recreate their original roles in the movie.

With a bank roll, the blessing of the Nelson Rockefeller Committee and plans all made to form her own company, Dolores Del Rio is a happy girl. I talked with her long distance in New York where she just returned from Washington. They told her the best thing she could do to help her native Mexico and the United States, where she lived so long, is to make pictures in the Spanish language, heading her own company and starring in them.

The pictures will be released in South America and will be intended to create closer relationship between Mexico, the United States and the South American countries. While in Washington Dolores conferred with Henry Wallace, who is heartily in favor of her program.

From the coal mines to the social register, Hollywood continues to dig for leading men. Paramount crops up with a brand new one, Sonny Tufts, to make love to Paulette Goddard in "So Proudly We Hail." Young Tufts is decidedly social. His Boston ancestors founded Tufts University in New England and when he was at Yale he was a star performer on the crew and football varsities. Sonny studied for the Metropolitan for years without ever quite making it. Lately he has been singing in the swankier New York and Florida night spots—and this is what brought him to the attention of a Para talent scout.

Ann Sothern didn't know until she showed up in the M-G-M wardrobe department how hard the clothes rationing had hit "Maisie." Maisie doesn't get a frill or a ruffle to her name for the duration.

All Work and No Play!

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 27.—Activities Stanley Laurel and Oliver Hardy have lined up for themselves for the next few months make the proverbial one-armed paperhanger look like a piker. Under contract to both M.-G.-M. and Twentieth Century, they're about to make "Air Raid Wardens" for Metro, to be followed by "Jitterbugs" at Twentieth. They're arranging to do a radio series. Milt Gross is preparing a syndicated cartoon strip on them to be called "Stan and Ollie."

ANN SOTHERN

They have a new Broadway play coming up, "Crying Out Loud," which is requiring a good many huddles. In between times, they'll sandwich in Army camp tours and war bond selling trips.

And on top of all this, the boys claim they're not kidding about that turtle meat business. Whew! How's Ollie going to keep that barrel waistline of his!

While they were shooting "Cabin in the Sky" (which, incidentally, was a sensation at the sneak preview), Metro stars used to gather around to watch the jitterbug dancers. Now they're hanging out on the "Private Miss Jones" set listening to that hundred-man orchestra under Jose Iturbi play the prelude to Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony.

Found Lana Turner, Ann Sothern, Walter Pidgeon, Wallace Beery, and dozens of others over there, standing spellbound on the sidelines.

Pierre Aumont has been fingerprinted, preparatory to going over to Africa to serve as liaison man between the French and American forces. He was in the mechanized division of French forces when they were fighting the Germans.

Aumont finishes "Assignment to Brittany" soon, and may do "French Underground" for Twentieth Century before he goes.

They're calling the number in which Eleanor Powell does rope tricks along with her dancing in "I Dood It" the "impossible number," and when the picture is shown, they'll run this part in slow motion to prove that she actually does the tricks. For this sequence Eleanor mastered in 80 days an art that ordinarily takes years of work.

The biggest mistake Director Richard Thorpe ever made was allowing a $5000 chess set to be used in "Above Suspicion." Fred MacMurray got so interested in it that he's learning the game, and now they have to pry him out of his dressing room every time he has a scene.

James Craig is growing that mustache again. I wonder whether Metro's trying to make him look like Clark Gable, just because he's getting Clark's roles.

Little Juanita Quigley has been made mascot of the Notre Dame football team by Coach Frank Leahy, and wears a medal to prove it.

When Desmond Slattery, civilian ferry pilot who's been flying planes over to Africa, visited the "China" set at Paramount, he not only made a good friend of Loretta Young but got himself slated for a test at the studio . . .

Made nice Thanksgiving day listening, with Elsie Janis, "sweetheart of the A. E. F." in the first World War, and Ginny Simms, voted favorite of service men in the present war, on the radio together, and Don Ameche as M. C.

The watchman at the RKO gate has had his dream come true. His grandson, Lon MacCallister, has the second lead in "Stage Door Canteen"—the role of "California." Lon' a 19-year-old college boy, and his only experience in pictures has been as an extra.

Hunts Hall will do a role in that picture if Director Frank Borzage can get him to change that Brooklyn accent to a New Jersey one.

When Maxis Rosenbloom met Comedian Joe De Rita at Lyman's, Maxie asked him how he felt. "O, I'm a little stiff from bowling," said Joe. "Never mind where you're from," countered Maxis, "what I want to know is how you feel!"

John Hubbard, who left Indiana University for the stage before getting his degree, has been taking extension courses, and one more term of U. C. L. A. will give him his diploma.

"Corregidor" promises to be the biggest picture PRC has turned out, with Otto Kruger, Donald Woods and newcomer Rick Vallon set for it.

John Payne has been taking June Havoc riding on the back seat of his motorcycle.

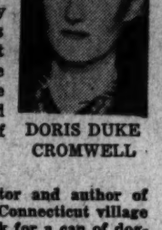
Broadway Glossary

New York, Nov. 27.

WEALTH: Doris Duke Cromwell inherited 10 million dollars more this week. She celebrated it at El Morocco. When the club shut its doors at 4 a. m., Erich Maria Remarque, who was at an adjoining large table, invited her to join the group. There were 20 people at that large table—including Dolores Del Rio and Gabriel Pascal, the movie producer. Pascal went into the kitchen, donned the chef's clothes, and cooked breakfast for the party. He served the food, then invited the chef to sit near Mrs. Cromwell. And so the young lady who that day had become one of the world's wealthiest, celebrated it by breakfasting next to a night-club chef, and confessing that the birthday gift which pleased her most was not the inheritance of money, but a calf someone had given her. "Because," she sighed, "the calf loves me."



DORIS DUKE CROMWELL

RATION: William L. Shirer, the commentator and author of "Berlin Diary," was in the grocery shop at the Connecticut village where he lives, and heard a woman ask the clerk for a can of dog-food. The clerk told her that there was none in stock, because of the Government order prohibiting the canning of dog-food. The woman was loud in her complaint . . . "Look here," Shirer told her. "Here in America we've stopped canning dog-meat because we're almost out of tin. But in Germany they stopped canning dog-meat because they're all out of dogs."

MAIL: Bruce Cabot telephoned from New York to his Hollywood home. His Filipino butler answered the phone. After inquiring about the welfare of his house-guests, Cabot asked: "Anything important come up?" . . . "No, boss," said the butler . . ."Any telegrams or letters?" Cabot continued . . . "No, boss," replied his butler. "Just a postcard. Nothing else" . . . Cabot was about to hang up, but then he asked: "What's on the postcard?" . . . "Nothing much," said the butler. "It's from draft board. It say you . . . just a moment . . . oh, yes, boss. It say you 1-A."

MESSAGE: Mayor LaGuardia, who has been making shortwave propaganda speeches to Italy, in Italian, will do an additional job for the Office of War Information. Fiorello, like the President, will broadcast in French, to the people of France.

DRAMA: Richard Rodgers, the songwriter, was in Sardi's after spending the morning in trying to cast his new show. He saw Margot Stevenson, the actress, and asked about her experience . . . Rodgers then sat down to lunch at a table opposite Miss Stevenson. The actress finished her meal carefully, paid her check and left, taking the proper measured steps and holding her head high. A minute later she rushed back to the table and reached for something on the floor. "I never was able to make a good exit," she confessed to Rodgers. "I forgot my umbrella."

CHATTER: The Democratic legislators in the State will notify Tom Dewey that they will support him, if he follows the liberal tradition of his predecessors in Albany . . . The President sent Alexander Woollcott a silver ruler with the President's name on it, which Woollcott had admired . . . Democratic leaders, who adhered to the Farley-Bennett line in the recent campaign, will petition for Farley's resignation as State chairman in favor of Charles Poletti. This is a result of Farley's St. Louis speech blaming the President for Bennett's defeat . . . The President of Ecuador, Batista of Cuba, and the Presidents of Bolivia and Chile will be received, in that order, at City Hall within the next two weeks.

REMEDY: Commander Gene Tunney told some Washington newspaperwomen about the battle zones. "The doctors carry sulphanilimide," Tunney began, "sulphathyasol, sulphapyridine, sulphadizine. And as for the lack of female companionship," . . . "Yes, we know," Isabel Griffin interrupted. "You recommend sulpha-denial."

Gilbert and Sullivan's 'Patience' Delights Another Packed House

Rapidly approaching the conclusion of their exceedingly popular engagement at the National Theater, the Boston Comic Opera Company presented last night an exuberant and melodious performance of "Patience" before a packed house that included at least a handful of standees.

Considering the authoritative perfection combined with the winning informality of their playing, it is not at all surprising that their repertoire of Gilbert and Sullivan operettas has surpassed all expectations at the box office. Indeed, it would have been more cause for astonishment had it been any other way. Seats for today's final performances are at a premium—if they can be had at all.

Risking the wrath of many Gilbert and Sullivan addicts, it is the reviewer's opinion that "Patience; or, Bunthorne's Bride," is one of the wittiest and most tuneful of the immortal pair's creation. As a satire on affection and affectation, "Patience" is still, after many years, an effective lampooning of the pseudo-aesthetic.

With the principal roles more evenly divided, "Patience" gave greater opportunity to various members of the cast to display their already proven ability to larger worth. Better adapted to ensemble playing, it is extremely difficult to single out any one player as surpassing another.

If orchids are to be bestowed on any they should go to June Winters, who in the title role displayed a winsome charm and lovely soprano. Miss Winters was particularly effective while singing "Love is a Plaintive Song," a sort of Gilbert and Sullivan torch song. Floral decorations also to, Florenz Ames, the lovable scene-stealer, who played Reginald Bunthorne; Morton Bowe, his rival; Phillip Tully, the Duke; and Robert Pitkin and Bertram Peacock.

Today's two performances will be repeats of the most popular of all Gilbert and Sullivan works, "The Pirates of Penzance" and "The Mikado." The former will be played at the matinee and the latter will ring down the last curtain on the group tonight.

Dr. E. F. Harris Renamed Civic League Head

Dr. E. F. Harris of Lincoln Civic Association was reelected president of the Federation of Civic Associations at a meeting held in the District Building last night.

Others elected were: Velma G. Williams, Pleasant Plains, first vice president; Guy Tinner, Bloomingdale, second vice president; Edith Thomas, Eastland Gardens, recording secretary; Martha Simpson, Kingman Park, assistant recording secretary; Edna West Payton, Lincoln corresponding secretary; William E. Nixon, East Central, treasurer and The Rev. James D. Pair, Pleasant Plains, chaplain.

Appointed by the president were George W. Beasley, Central Northwest, parliamentarian; Hezekiah Randolph, Ivy City, archivist and Malcolm D. Daniels, Midway, assistant corresponding secretary.

The association voted to continue the fight on the decision of the Public Utilities Commission which had denied a request for sale of car and bus tokens at three for a quarter.

The committee on collation voted to give a testimonial banquet to Woolsey W. Hall, retiring corresponding secretary.

The association heard an address by Judge Norman W. Scott of the Municipal Court, who also installed the newly elected officers.

December 7 To Be Holiday In New Mexico

By the Associated Press

Santa Fe, N. Mex., Nov. 27.—Gov. John E. Miles today proclaimed December 7 as a general holiday in New Mexico, marking the first anniversary of "the atrocious and shameful attacks by the Japanese Empire upon Pearl Harbor and other soil and possessions of the United States."

The proclamation asked that all places of business and industry, other than those essential in war work, as well as schools and public agencies, close on December 7.

It called for a "general holiday," so that "citizens generally may participate in the programs and become volunteers for victory' in whatever way they may best serve their Nation and their State."

The proclamation added:

"New Mexico was attacked on that day, not only as an integral part of the United States but through those valiant sons of our State who were serving in the Philippine Islands as members of the 200th Coast Artillery."

Some 2000 New Mexico members of the regiment took part in the final defense of Bataan and Corregidor.

Poll-Tax Case To Go Before Supreme Court

New York, Nov. 27 (AP).—The American Civil Liberties Union announced today through Attorney John F. Finerty, counsel in the poll tax cases, that it would renew its efforts to abolish the poll tax in eight Southern States by means of court action aimed at reopening the issue in the United States Supreme Court.

"Previous court decisions have upheld the poll tax as an exercise of State rights, but there are aspects of the relation between the Federal Government and the States which have not been put before the court," the union declared.

"It is the intention of those interested to institute a prooceding affecting the registration of voters in Virgina in the expectation that it will be brought before the United States Supreme Court within a year's time."

Odell Waller, Virginia Negro, was executed last summer for the murder of a white landlord. The poll tax figured in the selection of jurors.

Landon Refuses To Be Candidate For G. O. P. Post

Topeka, Kans., Nov. 27 (INS). Alfred M. Landon, 1936 Republican Presidential nominee, tonight removed himself from the lists as a candidate for the chairmanship of the G. O. P. National Committee.

"I would not be able to take the chairmanship if it was offered to me," Landon said.

Landon, prominently mentioned as a successor to Representative Joe Martin, said he would not attend the St. Louis meeting at which the new chairman will be chosen, and refused to commit himself concerning candidates for the post.

Earl Fined $200 In Violation of War Regulations

London, Nov. 27 (AP).—The Earl of Mansfield was fined £50 ($200) today after trial in closed court on a charge of violating British defense regulations.

The 42-year-old earl, a lieutenant colonel in the Home Guard, was not accused of any malicious intent. He was said to have acknowledged committing an indiscretion.

The complaint charged that he attempted to communicate to a correspondent information regarding the equipment, movement and disposition of British forces.

Before succeeding to his title in 1935 he sat in the House of Commons as Lord Scone.

Overhauling of Arms Production Program Means No General Curtailment, Officials Say

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Readjustment of American arms production, revealed this week to be under way, is not curtailment of production involving widespread economic dislocations, according to responsible persons here.

This move, they point out, actually is merely a shift in emphasis from items in which production has exceeded expectations to those which, for one reason or another, have not kept pace with demand. It is a matter governed not only by achievement up to now but by availability of materials and tools and the demands and lessons of battle.

It is a move long foreseen, based on what has been done as much as on what there is yet to do.

It does, in fact, mark the end of much of the uncertainty which has dogged the war effort.

It will result to some extent in freeing manpower and materials from new construction for the job of producing weapons.

It means that the mass production genius of America has paid off in tangible coin.

It does not mean that the battle of production is won. Far from it. But much has been gained in the last two years of plunging ahead in the dark. The way ahead is clearer.

Industrial Expansion

Those two years, particularly the year since Pearl Harbor, have been devoted to feverish expansion of industrial capacity, even while munitions were being turned out at a swiftly mounting rate. The two had to be woven in together.

"If we had thought of nothing but expansion," Undersecretary of War Patterson told The Post yesterday, "we would have had no production."

Much of the reason for the readjustment now under way lies in the fact that production in the midst of expansion far exceeded expectations.

"The ingenuity of American industry was even greater than we anticipated," said Patterson. "Plants that we called upon to produce a stated quantity of items are now actually producing twice and even three times what we asked.

"The result is that in many cases two factories are doing as much as we thought three would. Now those additional factories do not have to be built and we have canceled plans for them. We have not closed down any plants now operating."

Examples of this "ingenuity of American industry" are many and striking.

Powder Plant Increases

A smokeless powder plant was called upon to produce 600,000 units a day and then urged to produce 700,000. It is now turning out 900,000 units a day.

A plant making TNT was asked to increase its production from 400,000 units a day to 700,000. Its production now is 780,000 units daily.

A company which in peacetime made printing machinery was asked to readjust itself so as to produce 50 anti-aircraft guns a month. The Army now is receiving 110 guns a month from this plant, whose management has asked for "a bit more" equipment so it can make 150 guns a month.

Another firm, which in peacetime made heating equipment, now makes steel helmets. Since taking over this unfamiliar job it has increased its output 66 per cent and lowered its cost 30 per cent.

"From tin hats to 16-inch guns," said a War Department spokesman, "the story is the same."

In shipbuilding a similar condition exists. There is no apparent limit to the demands for new cargo vessels to supply the Allied armies on their globe-girdling front. But shipyards have so far exceeded expectations in their rates of production that it now appears that demands can be met without increasing the number of ways in use.

Again men and materials will be saved from construction for production.

All along the line, it is made clear that the present state of war production is the result of planning, as far as planning was possible when nothing could be definitely known of the ultimate needs of the armed services, of the lend-lease program, of lines of supply, or of available resources in raw materials and manpower, or the manpower needs of the Army and Navy, or needs and availability of tools and plant space. For a long time after production for war began it was not even known in what theaters America might have to fight.

In his message to Congress last January 6, President Roosevelt set certain production goals. He called for 60,000 airplanes this year and 125,000 in 1943; 45,000 tanks in 1942 and 75,000 next year; 20,000 anti-aircraft guns in 1942 and 35,000 in 1943; 8 million deadweight tons of merchant shipping this year and 10 million next. It was a tremendous, an overwhelmingly ambitious schedule which American industry tackled largely in the dark.

Ships and tanks and guns call for steel, not only steel as it is commonly known but tricky alloys of steel with chromium and nickel and tungsten. A tank, for instance, needs not only steel; it needs armor plate, which is a special steel, and it needs other special alloys of steel in its engine, in its instruments and in its arms.

Not one of the President's 60,000 aircraft for 1942 could be considered as a military weapon until it was equipped with engines, guns, instruments, propellers, radio.

All these things called for unprecedented expansion along lines where American industry was not prepared to expand. Industry had to expand as it produced and produce as it expanded; juke box manufacturers turned suddenly to the production of aircraft instruments, instrument manufacturers doubled, tripled and quadrupled their output. The airplanes rolled off the lines, minus one or another small item of equipment. Propellers were installed long enough for airplanes to be ferried from factories to flying fields and then taken off, while the airplanes waited on propeller production.

Most of that is finished now. There are still some material shortages in aircraft production but they occur along the line where expansion has been so tremendous it has not yet caught up with production. There is no shortage of aluminum, for instance, but there are shortages of certain types of basic aluminum parts. Aircraft production must depend, for instance, on production of extruded aluminum for spars, of certain aluminum castings, which almost nobody was prepared to make when production for war started.

These shortages are due almost entirely to shortages of tools, of specially designed furnaces among other things. Aircraft production is increasing as production of aircraft parts increase which, in turn, depends upon increase in production of tools.

New Tank Destroyer

There has been, in recent months, an increasing emphasis on self-propelled artillery. A new tank destroyer has been designed and placed in production almost in a matter of weeks. Experience has demonstrated a need for more and better fighter aircraft and for ground cooperation aircraft, which have been added to the long-range bomber schedule begun two years ago.

And, further, the unstable demands of the lend-lease program have greatly affected production schedules. Many items have been made for lend-lease which could not be shipped because supply lines to Allied nations have been harassed or cut. All these have gone back, for the moment, to swell the total of equipment on hand.

When supply lines are free again, much of this material will be greatly needed where originally aimed. Production then must be ready to supply it without curtailing supplies to American armed forces. On top of that, as American forces more and more hotly engaged in battle their own demands for munitions will mount steadily.

Present readjustments of production thus do not mean that the need for production has been met. The need is shifting; it will continue to shift as the war goes on. Shortages now existing will be met and other shortages will arise as new weapons and new uses for old weapons are developed.

There will be little if any economic disturbance resulting from the current readjustment. In fact, certain turmoils in employment which were expected by establishment of new plants in slightly industrial mid-western areas will be avoided by the abandonment of new plant construction.

In Detroit the other day, C. E. Wilson, president of General Motors Corp., told a press conference that "some minor unemployment" might result from the readjustment but it probably could be liquidated by contraction of overtime in many plants. He said he expected his company would have to continue employing additional hourly workers, though at a slower rate.

The effect of readjustment on industry and labor in general probably will be slight. As much production will be needed as before, though less in some items and more in others. Altogether, production will be steadily increased, though not at the hectic pace of the past year.

SUPERMAN — Hear Superman 5:30 P.M. Today—WOL — BY JERRY SIEGEL and JOE SHUSTER

THE STORY OF THE AXIS' INCREDIBLE TREACHERY IN KIDNAPPING SANTA CLAUS CONTINUES TO FLASH ABOUT THE GLOBE EVEN AS SUPERMAN SWIMS TOWARD EUROPE ON HIS AMAZING MISSION!...SOMEWHERE NEAR AUSTRALIA....
WHAT BURNS ME UP IS THE UNDERHANDED WAY THEY'RE STABBING AT THE HAPPINESS OF OUR CHILDREN....
AND THAT'S WHAT WE'RE ACTUALLY FIGHTING FOR—TO MAKE THE WORLD A BETTER PLACE FOR COMING GENERATIONS!
THIS IS THE LAST STRAW. LET ME AT THOSE LOUSY JAPS!
...AND IN A "CONQUERED" COUNTRY...
IT MAKES NO DIFFERENCE TO ME. I'D NEVER SEE SANTA CLAUS ANYWAY
HAVE FAITH, CHILD. SOME DAY OUR COUNTRY WILL BE ABLE TO CELEBRATE CHRISTMAS AGAIN.
CHRISTMAS AGAIN. HA! HA! HA! THAT'S FUNNY!
MEANWHILE, EN ROUTE TO BERLIN, SUPERMAN SIGHTS A SUBMARINE ATTACKING AN AMERICAN CONVOY....
A BATTLE, EH? IT WILL GIVE ME GREAT PLEASURE TO ATTEND TO THIS RATTLESNAKE OF THE SEA IN SHORT ORDER!

Gambling Fliers Place Trust In the Clouds

By Bob Brumby
International News Service Staff Writer

An Island in the South Pacific, Nov. 10 (Delayed).—They call them the gentlemen from Monte Carlo because of the long, wild chances they take in flying through to Guadalcanal no matter the weather or lurking Jap Zero planes.

The gentlemen from Monte Carlo were resting today when we interviewed their commander, Col. Perry K. Smith, in a native-built officers' hut squatting along the banks of a languorous, green river.

"We've been mighty lucky so far," Colonel Smith of Rochester, N. Y., told us with a wry smile. "Our motto is, 'in clouds we trust,' and we hope it keeps working for us in the right direction."

So far the gentlemen from Monte Carlo have evacuated more than a thousand wounded from Guadalcanal. That is just the round trip. Going in they carry anything from pencils to bombs.

Brig. Gen. L. E. Woods told us about the gentlemen from Monte Carlo. General Woods, a two-fisted, first-line officer of the old school, is volubly proud of this group of dare-devils. It is easy to see why.

Use Little Armament

It is divulging no military secret to the Japs to say the gentlemen from Monte Carlo race into Guadalcanal on their continuous missions of mercy and relief with little armament.

They figure on outwitting the Japs and they have done so, with the aid of our tenacious Grumman fighters guarding the sky ramparts of our first offensive area in the Pacific.

The gentlemen from Monte Carlo, the nucleus of whom is oldtime transport pilots, make from four to six flights daily to the canal, through any and all kinds of weather.

Second Lieut. Jimmy Walker of San Francisco, an ex-TWA pilot, found being saved by a Grumman from an attacking Zero a pretty expensive business. Walker was taking off from Guadalcanal when two Zeros got on his tail.

"I thought I was a goner," he says. "Just as I had finished the first part of a fervent prayer, I heard gunfire. A couple of Grummans had shot those Japs into pieces, one Grumman firing full blast before its wheels were off the ground. I promised to give the pilot of that baby a bottle of Scotch.

A Bottle Every Trip

"Since then I've been bringing a bottle in on every trip. That pilot must have been quintuplets, but I have to keep my word until I tie down the right guy. If this war isn't over pretty soon, I'll be working for a whisky company the rest of my days."

The base from which the gentlemen of Monte Carlo work is a tribute to American ingenuity and swift workmanship. From a crude, county fair runway, diligent and smart labor has built one of the finest fields imaginable. It is too bad Hirohito or Tojo cannot come over on an inspection. It would give them a pretty fair idea of the work cut out for them in the future.

No one kicks about the greatest obstacle but the production lines back home must keep grinding at top speed if these unselfish men are to keep up their magnificent task. The odds must be lightened, and I say that, not the gentlemen from Monte. They are not the complaining type.

Among the former airline pilots carrying on here are Maj. Fred Angstad of Chicago, a former crack pilot for United Airlines; Maj. Owen Ross of Bethany, Miss., who was connected with the Pennsylvania Central Airlines, and Maj. Walter Kimball of Kansas City, who was killed in an accident while taking off from here.

"One of Damn Best"

Major Kimball was a T. W. A. pilot and "one of the damn best that ever lived.

Colonel Smith and his aides are training men from the Marine ranks to fill in vacancies as the service is expanded "or for other reasons which we hope won't happen," as the handsome, likeable commander put it.

When the gentlemen from Monte Carlo began their amazing and unusual work back in September, the Marines held only 4 square miles on Guadalcanal. Had the wounded been forced to remain under fire with the limited aid that might have been given in such tight quarters, the list of dead would have been much, much higher.

Stimson In Corner

Young Army Officers Find A Defender

The much criticized young Army officer, whose presence on Washington streets in such large numbers has drawn fire from both public and congressional sources, yesterday found a defender in Secretary of War Stimson.

Pointing out that the younger officers have demonstrated a "healthy eagerness" in being transferred from the city, Stimson declared:

"Many of these young officers seen on the streets are on troop duty at posts around Washington, and some of the others are transients passing through the city on their way to other stations."

As for those who remain, Stimson said that every effort is being made to carry out orders that at least two-thirds of the officers on duty here be over 35 years of age.

"A substantial number have been transferred to field duty within the past three of four weeks, and orders have been given to accelerate these transfers," he said.

The transfers, however, must be coordinated with the organization of new field units, a process which the Secretary said could not be accomplished at once.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

"A hand turned up at our Friday night duplicate in Schenectady which I thought was more than usually interesting, as it gave both declarer and the defenders a chance to show their mettle," writes Miller D. Guyott, concerning the cards shown in today's box.

Today's Hand

Both Sides Vulnerable
WEST DEALER

	♠ 93 ♡ Q ◇ 10 7 6 4 3 ♣ K Q J 7 3
♠ A K 10 5 ♡ 7 5 2 ◇ A 9 8 ♣ 9 8 6	WEST	NORTH EAST SOUTH ♠ Q J 8 7 4 2 ♡ K J ◇ K 2 ♣ A 10 2
	♠ 6 ♡ A 10 9 8 6 4 3 ◇ Q J 5 ♣ 5 4

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♡
2 ♣	Pass	4 ♣	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: A ♡.

Declarer, had he not been confronted by perfect defense, could have won his four-spade contract by a double squeeze provided, of course, he knew how to make a double squeeze.

The lead-directing signal was the indirect means for the defense that blocked the squeeze play. As a matter of fact, most squeezes could be prevented if the defenders were only aware of the situation soon enough.

The purpose of the lead-directing signal, sometimes called the suit-preference signal, is to eliminate a guess as to what suit partner should return if he gains the lead. Frequently there is a problem as to which of two suits to play back; the trump suit and the suit first led being out of the consideration. The play of an unnecessarily high card asks for the return of the higher-ranking of the two suits in question; the lead of an unnecessarily low card asks for the return of the lower ranking of the two suits.

Taking today's hand as an example, South opened the ace of hearts against East's four-spade contract. It held, and because his partner's queen fell on the first trick he was pretty sure his partner would trump the second lead. He was weak in clubs and so did not want his partner to lead back a club after trumping. A diamond lead he could stand; in fact, he could even build up a trick in the suit. Diamonds were led twice. So South led the heart 10 to the second trick; it was obvious he did not need to lead so high a heart and the inference was he wished his partner to lead back a diamond.

Though North held good clubs and certainly could have switched with seeming safety, he obeyed the signal, led diamonds each time he obtained the lead and was rewarded by preventing declarer from the squeeze for four odd.

"This defense ruined declarer's chances for a nice play," writes contributor Guyott. "As it continued, declarer takes with the diamond king, goes to the board with the king of spades and returns a low club. North goes in with the jack and declarer lets it hold in the forlorn hope that North may still make an error. North, however, returns another diamond, knocking out dummy's ace entry and with it the chance for a very nice double squeeze.

"Had North returned the king of clubs when he was first in," our friend continues, "declarer should let it hold the trick. Thereupon a perfect squeeze is set up regardless of North's continuation, as even if North now shifts to diamond it is too late. Declarer takes with the king and runs off all the trumps."

	♠ none ♡ none ◇ 10 7 ♣ Q
♠ none ♡ 7 ◇ A 9 ♣ none	WEST	NORTH EAST SOUTH ♠ Q ♡ none ◇ 3 ♣ 10
	♠ none ♡ 9 ◇ Q J ♣ none

"When declarer plays his last trump, having cashed the ace of clubs before starting trumps, South has to discard down to two cards. He must hold a heart to prevent dummy's seven from being cashed; so he must go down to a singleton diamond.

"Declarer now discards the heart from dummy and North is in the same dilemma, as he must retain a club to keep declarer from making his 10-spot. With both defenders down to a singleton diamond, East leads with the diamond deuce over to dummy's ace and takes the thirteenth diamond for the last trick. He gives up a heart, a heart ruff and a club.

"Several North-South pairs gave incorrect defense on the hand but still set the contract because the declarer failed to recognize the chance of a squeeze by passing one club trick."

With the best defense, North returning a diamond after ruffing a heart, declarer must go down. He loses a heart, a heart ruff and two club tricks.

Park View Supper Simulates War Conditions Abroad

Gaining mute evidence of what Christian brethren in wartorn Europe are enduring, Washington's Disciples of Christ young people last night sat down to a supper of skim milk, saltines, vegetable soup, cold slaw, beans, rolls and apples.

The meal was eaten on a bare wooden table in the basement of Park View Christian Church, with blackout drawn, and candles as the only light. It was a feature of a service simulating wartime conditions abroad.

After the supper, they sat in an unheated church auditorium, with candles at the pulpit and organ, and heard Dr. W. Paul Bradley, formerly director of Far Eastern mission work for the Seventh Day Adventists, describe his escape from Singapore on a freighter when the Japs bombed the city.
